In reviewing the report on the working of the Police department for 1915, the Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd September, writes:—From the fact that 6 per cent of the police force quitted the service by resignation or desertion or dismissal during the year in question, it is evident that the police service is not attractive. More punishments are meted out in this department than in any other. Last year 30·9 per cent of those in the police service were punished. It is gratifying that it has been suggested that by entrusting the village police with more duties, and by other means, the work and the strength of the present police force may be reduced and that the money thus saved may be utilised in raising the scale of pay in the department. If Indians are freely appointed as Superintendents, the department will be made more attractive to them and there will also be a reduction in the cost of administration. The proposed appointment of persons who are thoroughly acquainted with local conditions as Sub-Inspectors will of course be productive of much good, but if their work is not properly supervised, they may exercise arbitrary powers and thus become intolerable to the public. The Government will, therefore, do well to give the leading non-officials recommending their appointment the power to recommend their punishment also.

The Police Administration Report.

(d) Education.

39. The Hindu Nesan, of the 6th September, learns with regret that Mr. Arthur Davies, the Principal of the Law College, is refusing admission to some students, who apply for it, now that the course has been reduced to two years, and observes:—Mr. Davies may be justified in refusing admission to students who wish to appear for this October examination. But he will do well to admit those who wish to undergo the B.L. course, considering the fact that they have to wait for it till next July. If he has no power to do it, he should apply for the necessary sanction either to the Director of Public Instruction or to the Local Government, as the case may be. Though it is now two months since the college was opened, we do not believe that many lectures would have been delivered. As the appointments of additional Professors and Assistant Professors have been notified only recently, much progress could not have been made in the junior B.L. class. We hope that Mr. Davies, who has been considered to be a friend of the Indian students, will show his sympathy practically at this juncture and see that students, who wish to undergo the full course, are admitted now.

40. The Manorama, of the 1st September, points out that most of the candidates who appear for the Government Technical Examinations, take up only Type-writing and Shorthand, the study of which makes them sickly and causes their premature death, and that therefore these examinations merely tend to produce a number of clerks, without in any way helping the growth of indigenous industries, for which the only remedy is the establishment of industrial schools for the teaching of handicrafts.

The Government Technical Examinations.

Manorama, Calicut, Sept. 1st, 1916.

In a note the Keralodayam, of the 5th September, points out that the popularity of the Government Technical Examinations is evidenced by the steady increase in the number of candidates appearing for them, and observes that those who fail in the University Examinations ought to be grateful to the Government, who, by holding these Technical Examinations, enable them to eke out their livelihood.

Government Technical Examinations.

Keralodayam, Trichur, Sept. 5th, 1916.

41. In a long leader the Keralodayam, of the 5th September, speaks highly of the educational systems in America, incidentally attributes the quarrels between the teachers and the taught in India as well as the anarchical deeds of certain Indian students, to the defects in the system of education in this country, and regrets that the authorities here do little to make the education in this country such as will enable the people to earn their livelihood.

Keralodayam, Trichur, Sept. 5th, 1916.

42. The Qaumi Report, of the 28th August, writes:—The Government has issued a communiquè as to what should be its policy in regard to female education and discussion on the subject will close by next month. It is a delicate question and only those, who have studied the international aspect of female education and who have some practical experience of organisation, are aware of its complex character.

Many people who are taken up with showy ideas and far-fetched notions are of opinion, that boys and girls should be educated side by side; and with regard to English education they consider that primary education should be imparted in that language.

We have already discussed this question and still firmly adhere to our former opinion that girls should be educated separately from boys.

The existing girls' schools in the country are of three kinds, viz., (1) Governmental, (2) Missionary, (3) National, in addition to this there are others under the management of rich Mussalmans or Anjumans. The method of education in all the three is in need of reform. Whether the school is a Government, Missionary or national institution, its existence or non-existence would be all the same without the national spirit. In considering the present results of the schools we regret to find that the advantages derived from the schools are more costly than the difficulties involved.

We have already stated that our zenana schools are destitute of the national spirit. In Government schools non-Muslim lady teachers have control, and even in Mission schools self-respect is on the wane, while in the national institutions the curriculum is generally narrow or quasi-official. We have often been told in reply that while our boys are benefited by the tuition given by non-Mussalman teachers what harm can accrue to girls being trained in the same way. But we are amazed to find that these people in their wisdom have lost sight of the fact that the object of educating boys is different from that of educating girls. Girls are to become mothers in future and are in need of an education that will be useful to them in training their children.

It is a mistake to follow European modes for European civilisation is altogether different. The relations of the sexes there differ from those which obtain amongst us. If women are employed or take service there it does not necessarily follow that we should compel our women to do likewise. In Europe religion and society are two different entities, and this difference has brought men and women together. But in Islam religion and society are connected and this connection has given women a separate place.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

"Female education and Government."

43. Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 30th August, writes:—The day before yesterday the Government of Madras issued an order to the Director of Public Instruction to convene a conference to consider the question of female education. It is believed that the conference will conclude its deliberations by the beginning of next month. We do not know what the composition of the conference is to be, or who will be deputed to represent Muhammadan girls.

At present there are two classes of men in the country, one desirous that education should be imparted to girls through the medium of English, the other considers it advisable to adopt the vernacular language as the medium of instruction. In the Madras Presidency, so far as the Muhammadans are concerned, we can say without fear of contradiction that the general idea is that Muhammadan girls should be educated through Urdu. At first the Government also adopted the same procedure and up to now instruction is given through this medium in all public and private schools.

We consider that the teaching of English is not at all necessary for girls, for it is admitted that gosha girls do not require employment and therefore they should learn as much of the English language as is absolutely necessary to enable them to take part in important matters. If education in the English language is made compulsory, then there will be no need for Muhammadan lady teachers in Zenana schools, and the manners and customs of our girls will assume a different aspect. Any change in the mode of education and training would be injurious to them. Our girls should especially be kept free from the burden of foreign languages.

We have experienced the difficulties of teaching a foreign language to boys and daily the difficulties in examinations are on the increase. In spite of boys going about, taking part in debating societies, writing and making fine orations, they fail in English. Every year there is a large number of failures of boys in English. It is apparent that in the first place girls cannot enjoy the facilities boys have, they are limited to the four walls of their schools, and their non-Muslim lady teachers cannot teach them English so efficiently as masters and professors.

In the course of study, History, Geography and Science have to be done in English but for girls the study of such subjects in English is out of place and improper.

The real object of teaching is to enable them to remember the substance of those subjects which can easily be learnt by them in Urdu. It will be a thousand times better if they are taught the essence of knowledge rather than teach them words and their pronunciation. Real knowledge does not depend upon the teaching of English words but on understanding them. With the aid of a translation a person who knows Urdu can gain as much mastery over Science, History and Geography as a person can with the help of English.

If oriental languages are included in the curriculum, the subtle intelligence of girls will not unnecessarily be burdened.

The educational policy of Government does not mean that our boys or girls are to learn simply words, but its real object is to cultivate their minds which cannot be done without the help of their respective mother-tongues.

Another point which calls for the attention of the conference is the prescribing of books on religion and domestic affairs with special reference to girls' education.

To the extent that women cling to religion to that extent are they able to inculcate obedience and reverence in their children. It is the lack of such habits that makes the problem of the discipline of boys appear so very difficult to-day. A boy who has any regard for God and reverence for king will never become a revolutionist on coming of age.

The principal element in domestic management is religion, and Muhammadan ladies are greatly lacking in education which combines intellectual with moral training. Another point to be brought to notice is that schools consisting of lower primary classes only are greatly injuring education of females, but we consider that upper primary schools are injurious. Education should be extended. If boys are educated up to the Middle School standard, it should be on a different line from that adopted in case of boys and be more domestic in character.

(e) Local and Municipal.

44. The Pandia Nesan, of the 2nd September, takes exception to the action of the Government in having allowed Mr. V. Srinivasa Achariyar, B.A., who handed over charge of his office as Chairman to the Divisional Officer only on the 2nd instant, to stand for re-election, and observes :—One of the recommendations of the Decentralisation Commission is that the Government should lose no opportunity in helping the growth of local self-government, and one means of doing this is to prevent public officials from standing as candidates for municipal chairmanship. Such being the case, we do not know on what ground Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar, who is in charge of the municipal portfolio in this Presidency, gave permission to Mr. Srinivasa Achariyar to stand for election again. It is because the Government has been permitting retired Deputy Collectors to become the Chairman of the Madura Municipality consecutively on the last two occasions, that public officials deem the post to be a close preserve for them and try to get into it. The salary of this appointment is only Rs. 400 ; but, if a public official gets it, he is paid an additional allowance of Rs. 200 together with a pensionary contribution of nearly Rs. 125 per mensem. Thus he gains nearly Rs. 4,000 a year above his salary. Is it fair to waste public money like this, instead of spending it for useful purposes such as education and sanitation? The period of chairmanship of Mr. Srinivasa Achariyar does not seem to have been marked by any tangible reform. On the other hand, we are reliably informed that his administration was very slack when compared with that of his predecessor. As he is over fifty years now, he cannot naturally attend to outdoor work actively and he will do well to withdraw himself from the field.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Railway grievances.

45. The Desamata, of the 30th August, says:—The travelling public have for a long time past been representing their grievances to the railway authorities. But the latter have treated the representations with an indifference which is indicative of either pride of authority or race prejudice. The overcrowding of passengers in the railway compartments, especially on the South Indian Railway, the great rush at the booking office which is due to the booking clerk commencing to sell tickets only a few minutes before the arrival of trains on the platform, and the reserving of compartments exclusively for Europeans and Eurasians, are some of the standing grievances which the public are now labouring under. A law court at Karachi has declared it illegal to reserve a railway compartment for any one section of the population exclusively. If the railway authorities here do not discontinue the practice, we will also do well to obtain justice in this matter in a court of law. We hope the Government will interfere and see that the grievances of the travelling public are redressed.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1916.

The Sasilekha, of the 1st September, says:—It is strange that the European members of the Pilgrim Committee have stated that much inconvenience is not experienced by pilgrims in their journeys by rail. It is to be regretted that they have not seen twenty persons huddled together in a compartment which has been intended to seat only eight passengers. The grievances of the third-class travelling public should be brought home to the minds of the authorities.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotta, Aug. 28th, 1916.

The enquiry of the Pilgrims' Committee.

46. Continuing its comments on this subject, the Vaisyamitran, of the 28th August, says:—The second direction in which the convenience of the pilgrims has to be secured is in providing sufficient accommodation for them during their stay at sacred places. In many of the places visited by a large number of pilgrims on special occasions, there are hardly any facilities of accommodation and boarding for them. There are no doubt hotels in big towns like Madura, Srīrangam and Chidambaram: but in small villages, there are no such facilities. It is no doubt the duty of the managers of the temples in these places to provide such facilities on occasions when a large number of pilgrims gather; but it is also the duty of the officials to see that this is done, and we hope the Government will bestow some attention on this subject.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1916.

Sanitation in Bengal

47. The Swadesamitran, of the 31st August, writes:—We regret to note, from the resolution issued by the Government of Bengal regarding the sanitation of that Presidency in 1915, that the number of deaths in the year exceeded that of births: This is due to several causes, some of which at least were anticipated by the Government at the end of 1914, and yet it does not seem to have taken any steps to ward off this evil. It is stated in the resolution that, as the financial condition was not very favourable in 1915 and as the services of the officials of the Sanitary department had to be lent to the Military department, it was not possible to carry out big sanitary schemes. It is true that there is scarcity of money on account of the war. But this will not justify the Government stinting expenditure on items such as education and sanitation, which form the vital bases of the progress of the country.

If India has become the abode of epidemics like plague and malaria, it is due to a large extent to the poverty of the country. If the people were rich and had sufficient nourishment, they would keep sound health and, even if they fell sick occasionally, they would easily get over it. It may be of interest for our readers to know that a committee, which was appointed in England to device means for preventing the fall in the population, has recommended that an improvement in the pecuniary circumstances of the ordinary people is the best remedy for it. If this is the case in England, which is rolling in wealth, much need not be said about India. The Government of Bengal has also stated in several places in its resolution that it is the poverty of the people of the country that is the cause of their insanitary condition. We would impress on the Government the necessity of giving effect to this view and trying to create facilities for the people to improve their material condition. For this not only agriculture but also the industries and trade of the country should be improved.

Mrs. Besant and the Government.

48. Referring to the order of the local Government demanding a security of Rs. 5,000 from Mrs. Besant as the keeper of the Vasanta Press in Adyar, the Swadesamitran, of the 31st August, says:—The orders of the Government of India are clear upon the point that, before demanding security from any printer under the Press Act, the local Government should warn the printer of the objectionable nature of the matter printed at his press. For aught we know, no such warning seems to have been given in the case of the Vasanta Press. The present action of the Government in demanding security without any previous warning is open to objection in two ways—firstly, it contravenes the orders of the Government of India that previous warning should always be given in the case of old presses; and, secondly, it may create unnecessary obstacles in the way of this press printing harmless publications on religion and philosophy, which is its main aim. We regret very much that the Government took this hasty step. Then again the Government has not pointed out in what manner this press has committed a breach of the provisions of the Press Act. It may be that there is nothing legally wrong in the action of the Government. But it is not a desirable step that the Government has taken, for it is not possible for the printer to guard against the recurrence of the offence and prevent the forfeiture of the security paid, unless he knows the nature of the offence committed by him. It is really regrettable that the present action of our Government does not seem to be justifiable, from whatever standpoint it may be looked at.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1916.

The Dravidabhimani, of the 1st September, thinks that Mrs. Besant has to thank her own pertinacity in caviling at the Government for the trouble she is now in, and is surprised at her attacking the Government fiercely, while she found fault with Mr. Gandhi for having made some unsavoury remarks about the Government at Benares.

DRAVIDABHIMANI, Salem, Sept. 1st, 1916.

The Vijayavikatan, of the 3rd September, wonders at the order of the Government declaring that Mrs. Besant has forfeited the security of Rs. 2,000 paid by her, and observes:—What is after all the offence of Mrs. Besant when compared with the havoc committed by the suffragettes in England? When the leader of these suffragettes was not punished by the British Government, what is the meaning of Mrs. Besant, who has not committed any such outrages, being proceeded against by this Government? It appears that, in reply to a question in the House of Commons as to whether Mr. Chamberlain had heard of the hue and cry raised by the people in India against the action of the Madras Government in the case of New India, he stated that he knew nothing about it. This is really funny. If the Secretary of State for India says that he does not know anything of a matter, which is the burning topic of the day in India, how can he know anything about this country?

VIJAYAVIKATAN, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1916.

The Lokopakari, of the 4th September, while objecting to the action of the Government in having declared the security paid by Mrs. Besant to have been forfeieted, without previously giving her an opportunity to know the nature of the offence committed by her and to correct herself, also finds fault with Mrs. Besant for not having changed the tone of the articles in her paper, even after the Government demanded a security from her and thus showed that it took exception to the tone of her articles.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th August, says:—If the deposit from the Vasanta Printing Press was required on the ground that it published objectionable articles like those that appeared in New India, then we fear that no paper or printing press is safe. The articles relating to Government alleged to be objectionable in New India will come up for consideration before the High Court. But we cannot see anything objectionable in the ordinary news published by New India as it appeared in the Gyan Prakash from the pen of K. Bhaskar in connection with the railway affray. Is it illegal under the Press Act to lay bare the repressive steps taken by the Railway subordinates? From an examination of the articles objected to, it is evident that the Government are averse to three things, namely, the discussion of the question of reserving compartments for Eurasians and Europeans, the criticism of articles appearing in papers owned by the English, and the agitation regarding swaraj. If the rulers definitely say what are objectionable, it will be some relief to the papers. New India reproduced an article from the Bombay Chronicle, criticised the very same thing that was criticised by the Judges, and asked the travelling public to bear this in mind The authorities did not like this. Could the Advocate-General have declared this illegal? But what could he do when the law favoured such an opinion? There is no unrest in Southern India. It is wrong to give much importance to the railway incident. Indian students only defended themselves, and it cannot be said that they offended or intended to offend anybody. It is unfortunate, under such circumstances, that the Government have in 1916 extended to this loyal and peaceful province a measure passed in 1910 to put down anarchism and revolution in Bengal and the Punjab. We pray that Lord Pentland will at least now free the people of this Presidency from their fears, and hope that the Press Act may soon be repealed by Lord Chelmsford who agreed to receive a deputation from the Press Association.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Desamata, of the 30th August, says:—It is to be regretted that the deposit paid by New India has been forfeited. But whatever straits she may be reduced to by the Government, Mrs. Besant is determined to work for self-government for India by all constitutional means. The Government have, in exercise of the authority given to them by the Press Act, "swallowed" the deposit, but in the order now issued they might have given the reason for so doing. The second scene in Mrs. Besant's drama has begun.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Aug. 30th, 1916.

The Desamata, of the 30th August, represents Mrs. Besant to have written in the Commonweal as follows:—If before a court of law declares the agitation for Home Rule seditious, the Government behave harshly, one should follow the advice of Jesus. It is this: "If you are troubled in one city, flee to another." It may be interpreted in modern language as:—"If they take possession of your printing press, begin to ascend platforms and make speeches".

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Aug. 31st, 1916.

Referring to the forfeiture of the deposit, the Andhrapatrika, of the 31st August, says:—Whether she committed any offence or not, many are of opinion that the present confusion is partly due to individuals indulging in mutual vituperation. We trust that Mrs. Besant will write less of individuals that the authorities will give up their stubbornness, and that in future no room will be given for commotion.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 6th September, refers to the forfeiture of the security paid by New India, and remarks:—The tone of a paper should be judged not by isolated extracts and expressions, but by the general policy that it follows. When the rulers are bent upon finding faults they will appear in heaps. There may be many things coming within the purview of the Press

Act. It will be fair on the part of the authorities to decide whether those things involve any hatred for Government.

That Mrs. Besant has been able to pay a sum of Rs 17,000 as deposit for New India and the Commonweal is an indication of her perseverance and influence. If the rulers had been so unkind to small papers as to the above-mentioned ones, they would have died out by this time. We pray that the authorities will give up their acts of repression and adopt peaceful means.

The Andhrachandrika, of the 7th September, says:—We fear Mrs. Besant will be brought into trouble. She is conducting New India in the same strain. We think she will not be left until there appears some change in the tone of the paper. We expected much good from that paper. It is not proper for Mrs. Besant to disappoint us. We believe the High Court will pronounce a just judgment on her appeal.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, Sept. 7th, 1916.

The Presidentship of the next congress.

49. The Prapanchamitran, of the 1st September, raises its voice against the procedure adopted by the Reception Committee at Lucknow in suggesting the name of Mrs. Besant for the presidential chair this year, in the face of the fact that Mr. Ambikacharan Muzumdar has been nominated by the majority of the Provincial congress committees, and says:—We expect a change for the better in the condition of India, when reforms are introduced in the British Empire after the end of the war. So it is our duty to represent to our rulers our wants and aspirations in a clear and steady voice. The resolutions passed by the congress this year should therefore be of such a nature as to convince the Englishmen that they embody the unanimous views of the Indians. How can there be any unanimity about the resolutions passed, if the opinion of the majority should be flouted even in the election of the president?

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 1st, 1916.

The Vijayavikatan, of the 3rd September, approves of the action of the Reception Committee in suggesting the name of Mrs. Besant for the presidential chair, and thinks that, if the congress is to do its work well, it cannot pitch upon a better president than Mrs. Besant.

VIJAYAVIKATAN, Madras, Sept. 3rd 1916.

The Home Rule League.

50. The Swadesamitran, of the 5th September, reproduces in Tamil the speech delivered by Mrs. Besant on this subject in the Gokhale Hall on Sunday last.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

Indian sick and wounded.

51. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Hindu Nesan, of the 5th September, dwells, with satisfaction, upon the report submitted to Lord Kitchener by Field Marshall Sir Walter Lawrence, which gives a detailed description of the gentlemanly behaviour of the Indian sick and wounded in the hospitals in England and the excellent arrangements made by the authorities to make these patients feel quite at home during their stay in the hospitals, and suggests that it will be desirable to get this report translated into the vernaculars and distributed broadcast in India, so that the ordinary people may know how kindly their brethren are being treated in England.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

The Viceroy's speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

52. Referring to this speech, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th September, says:—Lord Chelmsford seems to think that his powers regarding nominations to the Legislative Council are not sufficient, for he wished that there were some more seats in the Council for which he could nominate deserving Indian Military officers in appreciation of the valour shown by the Indian troops at the front. This is a strange statement indeed, if it is anything more than a mere compliment to the Indian troops. It was only recently that some Acts were passed by the British Government which laid down that European youths returning from the war, the subjects of Native States, which have rendered great help in this war, and some other classes of people concerned in this war, should be appointed freely to the Executive in this country, without any competitive examination, and should also be given some other concessions. If, in addition to titles, medals and other insignia of merit and even salaried appointments, the Government should adopt it as a policy to offer seats in the Legislative Council as a reward for service in the war, it will be a regrettable thing indeed. We do not think there is any necessity or reason, even in this period of war, for the Government to ignore the ancient English political principle that capacity should be the only criterion for appointment to an office and the fact of being a representative of the people the only criterion for occupying a seat in the Legislative Council and to introduce novel methods. As these methods may lead to many difficulties in the future, we hope the Viceroy will realise this soon and give them up.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 6th September, characterises this speech as a masterly one, and says that it indicates, not only a genuine attempt on the part of the new Viceroy to understand Indian questions but also his inclination to learn things from others, without clinging to his own opinion as the correct one.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

53. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th September, dwells upon the bright future of this industry in India, and exhorts the Government to demonstrate to the people the best methods of working it successfully.

The plantain fibre industry.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

54. The Swadesamitran, of the 7th September, publishes a communication from a Proctor in Ceylon, detailing the hardships to which the Indian coolies in the plantations there are subjected, and observes:—We do not know when the grievances of the Indian coolies working in European plantations will disappear. Lord Hardinge assured us that the British Government had decided to abolish the system of sending out indentured labourers to the Colonies, and we are glad that Lord Chelmsford is considering about the equally pernicious system of allowing Indians to be lured to proceed to foreign countries for working in plantations by private agents, who hold out false hopes of comfort and profit to them, while, as a matter of fact, they are treated worse than slaves after they get into the plantations. The most cruel portion of the law relating to these coolies is that which empowers the planters to prosecute those who stop away from work for a day or two, without reference to age or sex, and, if the condition of these coolies is to be improved, this law should be abolished first If any colony refuses to abolish this law, our Government should have the power to prevent Indians from proceeding to that colony. The Foreign Secretary and other officials, who attach greater importance to the interests of the planters, may object to this. But if the Government of India is strong, it can gain the point. There is no dearth of sources of livelihood in our country to necessitate our people going to foreign countries for purposes of living, and therefore the Government of India will do well to prevent their migration. If it may not be politic to do so at this stage, it is very necessary that steps should be taken to prevent coolies being prosecuted for trivial mistakes. We hope the Government of India will exercise the powers it has in this matter, and make the colonies redress the grievances of the Indian coolies at an early date.

The condition of Indian coolies in plantations

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Aug. 20th, 1916.

55. The Desabhimani, of the 20th August, says:—The Indians desire swaraj. In this desire all other desires are merged. Without swaraj free education is impossible. Social reform and the advancement of scientific knowledge will be easy only under swaraj. Industry will receive an impetus and the swadeshi movement will be crowned with success. Under self-government the South African troubles will cease and national education will spread all over the country. The Indian public are eagerly looking forward to the day when they will have all these. The belief in the certainty of British success in the war has given rise to such hopes in the Indians. The British who have given swaraj to Ireland in the middle of the war, who have promised the Colonies equal privileges with the mother country, and who have restored to the Indians the right to sue the Secretary of State, will not withhold swaraj from the Indians. We believe that the rulers will soon grant it to India.

Swaraj.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

56. In commenting on the notice issued by the Government offering certain facilities to those that wish to start industries, the Andhrapatrika, of the 5th September, says:—The authorities seem to have issued the notice with a view to create some work for the Department of Industries, for it contains nothing that is really encouraging to Indian enterprise. It would have been well if our Government have followed the example of the Mysore Government and introduced a system of advancing loans to the Indian industrial enterpriser for the purchase of machinery on condition of their repayment by instalments, just as they advance loans to ryots for the purchase of cattle, seed, etc.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

War rewards.

57. The Andhraprakasika, of the 6th September, says:—Her Majesty's Own Second Sappers, who belong to the Madras Presidency, are now engaged in the Mesopotamian theatre. It appears that they have not had any of the war rewards (such as clothes and eatables) sent from Madras. This is regrettable. They may themselves feel this, and so the managers of the War Fund will do well to give them some of these rewards.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The Darbar at Dacca.

58. Referring to the speech delivered by the Lieutenant-Governor (sic) of Bengal at a Darbar held at Dacca on the 23rd ultimo, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 2nd September, writes:—The speech was very sensible and instructive. Suppression of the wicked is the prime duty of every Government. No Government can be said to be perfect, but there are ways of bringing about reforms by constitutional methods. Grievances placed before the authorities in a loyal spirit are sure to be heard and redressed. On the other hand, any attempts made to coerce and threaten them are bound to fail. It is a mistaken policy to force the hands of Government to use their exceptional powers, which they, as a rule, exercise only when all the other milder means do not serve the purpose. It is to the interest of every one, therefore, that they should understand their rights and responsibilities and act in a constitutional manner so as not to give room for the exercise of such wide powers.

SWADESABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 1st, 1916.

The Bishop of Madras and Home Rule for India.

59. Referring to an article contributed by the Bishop of Madras to the Nineteenth Century, the Swadesabhimani, of the 1st September, remarks as follows:—Among those who are in favour of swaraj for India there are many Englishmen too. It gives us particular pleasure to find even the English Clergy engaged in seriously considering over the question and the more so because they do not, as a rule, dabble in politics. The Bishop of Madras has indeed shown rare courage and high statesmanship in writing on a political subject—the subject of Home Rule for India—and that too in favour of the Indian people and in giving to his countrymen a few words of wholesome advice. For this noble act of his we offer our sincere and grateful thanks to his Lordship.

The Bishop, however, does an injustice to the Indian nationalists by placing them on a line with the few Indian anarchists, merely for the reason that the former also make a demand for Home Rule, forgetting all the while that the nationalists always employ constitutional and loyal methods of agitation to achieve their ends. Herein his Lordship has erred eggregiously and we beg to differ from him.

Again his Lordship thinks the Home Rule agitation dangerous but does not tell us what other means we may employ to win our goal. Rather the reasons adduced by him in favour of Home Rule, if at all, go only to strengthen the case in favour of agitation for it. On the whole, however, we are inclined to hope that his words of advice to the high English officials and his arguments in favour of self-government for India, coming as they do from such a high dignitary of the church, will not fail to have some good effect upon our rulers. It is the earnest hope of the loyal people of India that our rulers will view our ideal of Home Rule for India in a favourable light and grant us, when the war ends, a suitable form of self-government in recognition of our deep loyalty and valuable services to the Empire.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 5th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 5th September, remarks:—This article looks more like one written by an Indian rather than by an Englishman. His Lordship's line of argument is sound and unquestionable, and yet, some Englishmen object to it and wonder that one of their own countrymen could be found to write in that manner. There are some Englishmen who think that even an experience of five centuries will not fit the Indians for a democratic form of Government, but such men are few and far between. It is our firm belief that a very large majority of the people in England are in favour of granting us the kind of democratic rule which they themselves enjoy, immediately we show our fitness for it. History tells us how the British nation rose above the pretty prejudices of some of their countrymen and emancipated the Negroes from their bonds of slavery. Those people who wish to keep the Indians under subjugation for ever only betray their want of foresight and knowledge of the past. The history of the world testifies to the fact that the dynasties of even the most despotic of monarchs did not rule for more than three or four centuries at the most. In the face of this it is surprising, indeed, to find a few Englishmen who believe that they can continue to rule India autocratically as long as the sun and the moon last.

It can safely be asserted that the Indians were fully fitted for self-government even before the British set their feet in India. Their national kings were despots only in name and what little absolute power they possessed they used only for the even-handed distribution of justice. Instances are not wanting in our Puranas which go to show how wicked monarchs were being put down by their subjects in ancient times. A country which enjoyed self-government by means of the village panchayats in former times, and has even under the British rule produced eminent men who have passed the highest educational tests and shown themselves in no way inferior to their English fellow-subjects in administrative ability, a nation, again, which is able to successfully manage mighty national movements, such as the social, political and other conferences, and has shown that its sons are capable of exceptional intelligence in dealing with even highly technical and scientific matters, how can such a nation be declared, in justice, to be unfit for self-government? No Empire based on injustice can ever hope to last long. The British rulers treat it as a matter for pride that they always look upon themselves as the servants of their subjects, and will therefore feel their highest ambitions gratified when Home Rule is firmly implanted in India. We are ever hopeful that when, after the close of the war, we ask for representative Government they will grant it to us with all their heart.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 4th, 1916.

Mrs. Annie Besant and the future of New India.

60. Referring to the order of Government forfeiting the amount of security given by Mrs. Besant and the announcement of her intended appeal to the High Court thereon, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 4th September, remarks:—In spite of her exceptional intelligence Mrs. Besant does not appear to possess the power of self restraint, which is generally the characteristic of the male sex. It is not that the Madras Government is an irresponsible body, nor do they gain anything by the suppression of New India. They may have passed such an order only with a view to make her conduct her paper on more reasonable lines. If only she would appear before the Governor and assure His Excellency that she would henceforward conduct herself with due restraint, it is just possible that she may be given back the amount of her security and earn the good-will of the authorities in the same way as she has that of the public. Such a step will greatly enhance the reputation of New India, and Mrs. Besant's importance as a political leader will enable her to attain her object with ease. It is, indeed, a matter for deep regret that the splendid advice she gives to others is not observed by herself in practice. She is not unaware that what can only be achieved by peaceful means cannot be done by the use of force. We earnestly hope that Mrs. Besant will ponder over the matter and rather than rush to the High Court, come to terms with the Government by explaining her past conduct with a promise to behave better in the future, and by depositing, if necessary, even a larger sum of money as security. It is the opinion of every one of her well-wishers that she should continue to conduct her paper on these terms rather than put an abrupt end to her journalistic activity.

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Aug. 30th, 1916.

New India case.

61. Referring to the latest order of the Madras Government regarding New India case, the Malayala Manorama, of the 30th August, observes that, as the Government have to employ all the resources at their command to bring the war to a successful conclusion, all those who have an affectionate and grateful regard for the British Government ought to understand that it is not proper on their part to cause any embarrassment to them in the discharge of their onerous duties, and that therefore this incident should not be made the occasion for creating any unrest among the people, at least till the war is over.

Writing on the same subject, the Yogashemam, of the 1st September, says :—The fight between the Madras Government and Mrs. Besant is becoming more and more tight, the one special feature of it being that it is not carried on with weapons. Her paper, New India, severely criticises the various acts of the Government, and, according to Indian leaders and papers, these criticisms are not altogether baseless. But the Government's view on the matter is unfavourable to her, and, when they are displeased, punishment must naturally follow.

YOGASHEMAM, Trichur, Sept. 1st, 1916.

* * * * *

We can only wait and see what the end of all this will be.

Referring to the New India case, the Keralodayam, of the 5th September, observes that nobody can complain against the order of the Government, as Mrs. Besant has only herself to blame for all her troubles.

The New India case

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 5th, 1916.

The Qaumi Report, of the 30th August, writes :—The end of our local contemporary New India is really regrettable. Mrs. Annie Besant's head and heart will doubtless advise her rightly. There is no doubt the plain of politics is beset with dangers. We ourselves are crossing it in the spiritual strength of Holy Islam. But deplorable is the state of those who abandon their religion in the hope of making a conquest of politics.

New India.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

62. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 1st September, writes :—It is on account of the partition of Bengal that the swadeshi movement came into existence some ten years back and in order to make its power felt, our leaders started the boycott of foreign articles as well. This was not to the taste of the authorities, who thereupon made a distinction between "honest" and "dishonest" swadeshi and discountenanced the movement, and as a result of this even the "honest" swadeshi began to languish. To put it briefly, the movement which began with such a flourish of trumpets gradually grew and ineffective. But of late, since the outbreak of the present European war, the attention of our Government has been drawn towards the development of Indian industries and the Government which a decade ago turned a deaf ear to the public complaint that on account of the adoption of the free trade policy in this country the fine machine-made foreign articles had ruined our indigenous industries, is, it is gratifying to note, now of its own accord, engaged in reviving them, as is evidenced by the fact that they have recently instituted a commission to hold an enquiry into the present condition of indigenous industries. The paper then goes into details as regards the scope of the enquiries to be held by the commission and continues. :—There is no doubt that many important facts and far-reaching questions will come up before the commission and will be discussed in all their aspects. But the institution of the commission will be of real benefit to the country only if the commissioners decide those problems from an Indian point of view, and the Government also willingly adopt and take practical action upon the suggestions made by them. Commissions we had and in abundance even during the regime of Lord Curzon, but from a popular point of view they proved to be of little or no benefit to the country. We, however, hope that unlike its predecessors the present commission will perform its duties satisfactorily and that our Government will not fail to grant us industrial swaraj by giving practical effect to the measures suggested by it.

The Indian Industrial Commisson.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 1st, 1916.

63. Commenting on the judgment of the Calcutta High Court, rejecting the application of Miss Guha for enrolment as a Pleader of that Court, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 7th September, writes :—The law in force at present does not, it seems, permit women being enrolled as lawyers and the judgment of the Court is in accordance with it. But it is time that the legislature should undertake to amend this iniquitous law in a fitting manner. It is hardly fair that Government should, in the first instance, permit women to read for the degree examinations in law and then decline to allow them to practise as lawyers. We trust that the Government will soon take steps to remove this unjust anomaly.

The enrolment of Miss Guha.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 7th, 1916.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 1st, 1916.

Miss Regina Guha.

The Manorama, of the 1st September, sympathises with Miss Regina Guha, B.A., B.L., whose application for enrolment as a vakil was recently rejected by the Calcutta High Court, and hopes that the Government will carefully think over the matter and find a remedy for it, or give her some decent appointment.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Secretary of State's ignorance of Indian affairs.

64. Referring to the Secretary of State's reply to a question in Parliament regarding New India security case, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 30th August, asks:—If the Secretary of State, who is entirely responsible for the administration of India, has no information in such matters, who else can have it? How should he proceed to possess himself of such information? Is it consistent with his duty to be without it?

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The ensuing congress

65. The Kerala Patrika, of the 2nd September, points out that, owing to the differences of opinion among the various congress committees, regarding the selection of the president, there is a possibility of this year's congress being a failure, and that it would be a death-blow to the congress itself, if Mrs. Besant, who prides on her being in the bad graces of the Government, should be selected as its president, and hopes that the leaders, who have the welfare of the country at heart, will spare no pains to save the congress from the danger that threatens it.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 5th, 1916.

Indentured labour.

66. Referring to the promise of the British Government regarding the abolition of the indentured labour system, the Keralodayam, of the 5th September, points out that any delay in the fulfilment of it will be dangerous, draws attention to the endeavours of the Fiji planters to induce the Government to allow the present system to continue for another five years which, if they meet with success, will be attended with disastrous results, and calls upon the Members of the Imperial Legislative Council to make proper representations to Government on the subject at its next meeting.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Aug. 28th, 1916.

"Insane criminals."

67. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 28th August, referring to the recent order of the Madras Government curtailing the period of restraint of recovered lunatics, says: It is impossible for us to find words to adequately express our gratitude for the facilities and comforts provided for the country and people by our benign Government.

The release of lunatic criminals will not only impress those unfortunates with the greatness and magnanimity of the Government, but will be an inducement to them to pray for its victory and success.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 26th, 1916.

We and our deeds.

68. The Qaumi Report, of the 26th August, in a leader on the marginally-noted subject, writes:—Christianity came to India after Islam, but through the influence and support of the Government it succeeded in spreading. Had we, however, opposed these two influences they could not have withstood spiritual power. We stepped aside and now we are considering how to save our religion.

Many people are pessimistic and think that Islam cannot make any more progress. Many others are clamouring for wealth and power in the belief that without these two, success is impossible.

If we would but read the history of our ancestors! What wealth or power had we in Africa? When we landed on the Malabar Coast what support had we, and what had we in our haversacks? In what condition did we enter the mountains of Afghanistan, and with what status have we now gone to London? Such is the goodness of God, although we have not unlimited power, neither are we entirely destitute.

The theosophist, the Salvation Army, the Arya samajists and Roman Catholics are flourishing in India and doing their work without Government support, but we, Mussalmans, to our shame, are unable to do anything. The fact of the matter is that the life blood of our zeal has become highly diluted. Political parade has put religious display into the shade. Our views, mental attitude and we ourselves have all changed. The hunger for wealth and fame have developed into bulimy! Mussalmans, who once regarded wealth as a fleeting thing only to be used in making provision for the next world, now consider it as something eternal to be hoarded and jealously guarded. Alms-giving is no doubt practised, but, while alms given by other nations removes poverty, our charity encourages penury.

The Padris with their temporal power remember their Heavenly Father, but we, with our spiritual kingdom, have forgotten the Lord of Earth and Sky. The Moulavies have become the brokers of Heaven and Hell and the leaders of the people the agents of civilization and education and both are obtaining their commission. God only knows how long the true Faith will be hidden and till when the world is to be deprived of the message of Islam!

Our hearts have lost the ring of sincerity and there is no zeal left in our souls. Religion is being lost and God and the apostle are being slighted, but we are not grieved thereat. We are happy with our commerce, employment, wives and children. And yet we are Mussalmans of the Mussalmans!

"We and our country."

69. The Qaumi Report, of the 30th August, writes:—Yesterday I pointed out the position of us, Mussalmans in India, is worse than that of exiles. People say that is our native land and we are the sons of the soil. For a long time Hindus regarded us strangers and sojourners and treated us as such. If we would only consider the state of our streets and homes, we might better appreciate the condition of our country and the treatment of our compatriots.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Several centuries have passed since we migrated to this land. Although we have settled here and buried the precious bones of our ancestors beneath this soil our compatriots are still strangers to us. We cannot enter their houses, sit near them, dine together or sit in their streets.

They have no regard for our nationality. They do not count us as one of themselves nor do they like our language. They do not respect our places of worship, but march past them playing music and singing songs. They care not for our shrines and sacred places, but will with alacrity take them in mortgage, knock them down and build their houses thereon.

We have with patience and fortitude endured this period of exile and estrangement in the belief that the people of the country have free scope in their own country. But it appears we are strangers, aliens and poverty-stricken and therefore have no right to complain.

But now that the British administration has opened its eyes, they (Hindus) have declared us to be their partners. They say that India is also our (Mussalman's) native land, and we also should offer sacrifices at its threshold. We, Mussalmans, who regard the whole world as our home and life as but a journey, are amazed to hear the expression "native land"; but are unimpressed by the blandishments of these so-called patriots. Whether India is our native country or not, we know that its soil has been enriched by our best blood.

If at this time India deserves any consideration, the first favour should be shown to us strangers.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

Encouragement to agriculturists.

70. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 6th September, writes:—In this (Mysore) Province agriculture is the chief occupation of the people, most of whom, however, do not possess their own lands. Three-fourths of the peasants are either tenants or agricultural labourers under zamindars. The condition of these people is very miserable. They are very poor and backward in the matter of education and culture. With a view to improve the economic condition of our country, economists suggest various means such as courses of lectures to the people, publication of suitable books for their use, creation of various departments and committees, etc., but no one appears to direct his attention towards the miserable plight of those who are slaving for their livelihood under landlords and find out how far this condition of theirs is responsible for the backwardness of our country. The Government are bestowing large landed estates upon rich men on specially favourable rates of assessment, but this does not serve to improve the condition of the agricultural labourers who serve under them, to any appreciable degree. It is no doubt very laudable that our Government should spend large sums of money in various ways with a view to improve the condition of our State and to increase the intellectual and earning capacity of our people. We are, however, of opinion that one of the best methods to improve the economic condition of our people would be to make free grants of small plots of land and agricultural cattle to such of the peasants who do not possess them. This would make them work with more zeal and thereby increase their income and also encourage them to train their children in their own profession. We trust that the members of our Representative Assembly would submit this proposal for the consideration of Government.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE Bangalore, Sept. 6th, 1916.

VRITTANTA PATRIKA, Mysore, Sept. 7th, 1916.

The Mysore budget statement.

71. Commenting on the budget estimate of the Mysore Government for the year 1916–17, the Vrittanta Patrika, of the 7th September, writes:—We note that the budget statement for 1916–17 has been published fully two months after the actual commencement of the official year to which it relates. . . . . It is stated that the budget estimate for the year 1915–16, as revised at present, shows a net increase of Rs. 29,59,000, as a combined result of the revenue being higher and the expenditure lower than that estimated in the budget. But we note with consternation and sorrow that one of the heads which has yielded an increase of revenue during the year, as in the previous years, is the excise. That our people should waste over a crore of rupees on intoxicating liquors and bring upon themselves poverty and misery is indeed a matter for deep regret to all well-wishers of the State. The abiding interests of the people demand the closure of a much larger number of liquor shops by Government and any delay in attending to this important matter would cause untold harm. . . . . Of the interest of Rs. 79,026 estimated to be due from monies lent to jaghirs only Rs. 26,000 appear to have been recovered at the end of the year; similarly out of Rs. 1,02,190 shown as due from agricultural banks only Rs. 5,000 has been recovered. Again, a sum of Rs. 12,000 is shown in the budget as interest due from the Mysore Spinning and Manufacturing Company, but figures are wanting to show that any part of the amount has been recovered. If the company is being worked as a Government concern, it is desirable that a closer supervision should be exercised over its affairs by Government, inasmuch as its success as a paying concern will prove a great incentive for the establishment of many more factories in the State. Of the Rs. 14,600 advanced on lands only Rs. 7,000 are shown as recovered in the revised budget. We are not told as to who is responsible for this slackness. Rupees 2,36,000 have been set apart for expenditure in connection with the Economic Conference, but we are afraid that most of the amount will be eaten up by salaries and allowances of the officers and their establishments. The amount that has been allotted for the "entertainment of guests" appears to us too large and may with advantage be reduced. . . . . Some of the items are simply inexplicable to us. Much speculation would be set at rest if the object of the "subsistence allowance to Mr. B. Narasimha Ayyangar" is explained.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. The Hindu, of the 13th September, writes:—"The all-absorbing interest in the war and the exceptional circumstances created by it, have been in a large measure responsible for the fact that the Ceylon riots and the high-handed measures taken by the Government attracted but little attention from the British public and Members of Parliament. . . . . Our leaders are already familiar with the circumstances of the riots and the serious consequences that resulted from them. Martial law was in force for over three months and there were many executions, imprisonments and severe flogging, all without regular trial. Special Commissioners who were appointed to award compensation to the victims of the riots assessed on the whole Sinhalese population, even on those who according to the Government never took part in the riots, the huge sum of Rs. 5,500,000. Over and above the crude and unequitable manner in which the assessments were levied and collected, the most extraordinary feature of the award of compensations was that a Muhammadan merchant made a tour round the island and furnished the Government with an account of his journey and the sufferings which his brethren had incurred through the riots, and finally demanded summary vengeance, and this most partisan report was made use of by the Government! . . . . We cannot really congratulate the Colonial Secretary on the wisdom of refusing an interview to a prominent member of the Ceylon Legislative Assembly because the local Government informed him that the member sought the interview in order to be able to go back and say that the Colonial Office had thrown over the Government. This is an extraordinary and indefensible instance of trusting for guidance to the men on the spot. A careful study of the whole discussion leaves us the impression that a more pointless defence and a more callous refusal to face facts, could not have been made, and we doubt very much whether such pleas for inaction would have been advanced if countries other than of Ceylon or India were concerned."

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 13th, 1916.

The Ceylon riots and the Home Government.

II.—Home Administration.

2. New India, of the 11th September, writes:—"We print elsewhere an announcement to the effect that the students of the Law College are returning to their studies to-day. We do not know whether any compromise has been arrived at, but we cannot help regretting the unnecessarily harsh conditions imposed by the Principal on all who resume work. We agree that strikes in educational institutions are highly undesirable, and we are willing to admit that scholastic discipline involves the maintenance of a certain amount of prestige. But the final basis of satisfactory discipline is mutual understanding and sympathy, and while the law students may have been unwise to strike, the Principal himself adopts an attitude which can hardly be said to promote good feeling. An expression of regret from the students answered by a sympathetic assurance from the Principal that he would try to meet their wishes would have healed a somewhat angry sore. As it is the sore remains, though apparently covered up."

New India, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

The Law College strike.

(e) Local and Municipal.

3. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th September,* writes:—"Our contemporary the Kerala Patrika publishes a communication from a Tellicherry correspondent in the course of which the writer points out the weak points in the

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 7th, 1916.

The Tellicherry Municipality.

* Received on the 14th September 1916.

local municipal administration, and says that a change in the personnel of the administration will be greatly appreciated by the rate-payer. Our own information goes to support the correspondent's position. A chairman to succeed must have time and health to devote to civic affairs. . . . . A chairman is everything in a municipality. His is the force that keeps the individual members of the executive in their proper places and pulls up over-enthusiastic or erratic bounders, while his influence keeps the equilibrium and reconciles the rate-payer to the ways and methods of the executive. A younger spirit and fresher blood will no doubt improve matters for the better, and it is hoped that the Council will see to this at the forthcoming election."

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

The Madras Corporation.

4. The Hindu, of the 11th September, remarks:—"We can generally expect to find plenty of interest in any report by Mr. Molony, an officer perhaps unique in this Presidency for the bold way in which he attempts to transform arid reports into a species of light literature which the man who runs may read with amusement and, doubtless, also a certain amount of profit. . . . . The dominant note of the report is a self-complaisance which appears to us somewhat ill-timed in view of the financial situation of the Corporation. That this situation is a desperate one Mr. Molony is the first to admit. . . . . How then did such a sorry state of things develop? Mr. Molony believes it was inevitable and is not the result of extravagance; it is merely the evidence of the Corporation awakening to a sense of its responsibilities. The ratepayer, on whose shoulders is laid the very real burden of maximum rates, as a return for which he is asked to contemplate benefits which he regards as problematical, may well pause to ask whether there ought not to be definite limits to the activities of local bodies. . . . . On the subject of education Mr. Molony is full of apologies. The claims of sanitation had to take precedence and so education went by the board. In conclusion, Mr. Molony pays a graceful compliment to the Commissioners for their valuable assistance, the warmth of which may cause among some of them some searching of heart. To sum up, the picture is a depressing one, though that is not Mr. Molony's fault. He is not responsible for the state of the finances and he has done his best to point out the compensating advantages. But what of the future? With a population more or less stationary, and expenses outrunning income, Madras can soon boast of possessing the costliest administration in antithesis with its utility in the world. A distinction certainly, but not one to be particularly proud of."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept 12th, 1916.

The leper nuisance in Cailcut.

5. The West Coast Spectator, of the 12th September, observes:—"The leper nuisance has become intolerable in Calicut. People may be surprised to learn that lepers are allowed to carry on trade, even in food-stuffs and to do public washing with perfect impunity, offering a very serious menace to public health. Some years ago there was a proposal to extend the operations of the Leper Act to Calicut, and we do not know why it was given up. We do think that the time has come for the Municipal Council and the Collector to make strong representations to the Government on the matter in the interests of the general public."

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The story of a re-settlement.

6. Referring to the re-settlement operations in the Punjab, the Indian Patriot, of the 15th September, writes:—"There is no question which excites more real hardship among the people than what is understood by the term harsh resettlement. The Government nowhere displays a worse want of foresight than in the easy sanction of re-settlements which turn the mild ryot into discontent with his lot. The educated Indian, when he finds the door of superior grades of service shut against him, is discontented; but what of the hardworking ryot who knows no politics and whose only consideration is that he should have his fill after a day's sturdy toil? . . . . If there is any one less capable of bearing taxation, it is the poor cultivating ryot; and as it is, he is more heavily taxed than any other profession."

7. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 6th September, observes: —"Not to be outdone by Mr. Tilak and her Poona friends Mrs. Besant has started her Home Rule League in Madras. The opening ceremony did not lack the theatrical ostentation due to such a grand occasion and in the immediate presence of Mrs. Besant and her theosophical admirers, it was ushered into existence on Sunday last (the 3rd September) at the Young Men's Indian Association. Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar and Mr. Telang hold the Secretariat portfolio, but the organising chief will be Mr. Arundale, while the First Lord of the Treasury will be Mr. B. P. Wadia. Few outside the ranks of the Theosophists may know Mr. Arundale or Mr. Wadia and most people who have till now laboured hard for the political well-being of the country, may like to know the title of these people to take up the political leadership of the land. . . . . A badge was given her by one of Mrs. Besant's admirers. That over, she must have, like another Joan of Arc, marched on horseback with her followers to Fort St. George to proclaim Home Rule. But the twentieth century Joan could do nothing so heroic and so delivered an oration instead, invoking Arjuna and Krishna and all the ancient mighty warriors who wrought wonder in their days. And then—what then?—a vote of thanks and the meeting dispersed. . . . . Sane politicians who really care for the well-being of the country cannot but exclaim, 'enough of this play.' It has been said that the League is not meant to be run in opposition to the Congress. Of that we are certain, not because its objects are identical with those of the Congress, but because of the inherent incapacity of this body to set itself up seriously as a rival to that organisation. Mrs. Besant has been writing to the Press that the office-bearers are only temporary, but it is notorious that the mofussil leagues have been started by Mrs Besant's few theosophical allies and others who have nothing particular to do and these mofussil bodies have made identical nominations."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Sept. 6th, 1916.

The Home Rule League.

8. In a leader on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 12th September, says:—"The debate in the 'Madras Parliament' on Sunday on the Home Rule Bill rose above the level of a mock debate. Mr. Arundale, speaking as the leader of the opposition, advanced facts and arguments with which many outside would be in sympathy. . . . . In fact, much of the difference which has arisen between Indian politicians and Mrs. Besant is due to the fact that Mrs. Besant is impatient of difference of opinion. There were more speeches on the opposition side than on the other, and all the opposition speeches reflected the prevailing opinion in the country, and some of the speakers, we have no doubt, spoke out honestly. . . . . All that Mr. Arundale said was in accordance with commonsense, in accordance with history and practical experience, and what he said commends itself to men of practical experience and knowledge of the world. . . . . It is because we are not convinced that we possess the capacity for conjoint action, that we have yet to learn many things before we can take upon ourselves the full responsibility of Government, that we are unwilling to accept the Home Rule of Mrs. Besant. We realise that we, as a nation, are not capable of undertaking the responsibility and discharging it with equal satisfaction to all classes of people. We may get Home Rule tomorrow; but what are we going to do with the gift unless we are prepared to make full use of it. It is not enough to make out a case against our rulers. Even if all the contentions, which Mr. Arundale refuted were true, that would not establish our claim for Home Rule. That claim must rest on our own merits, on our capacity, and on the deficiencies of the present Government. However imperfect that Government may be, it has the merit of governing the people in peace, of being regarded by all classes as on the whole the best possible under the circumstances. What will be the position of the Home Rulers? Will they command the same amount of confidence in their impartiality and justice? Will they inspire the same respect? . . . . In a sense, we are all Home Rulers; we are all for ultimately achieving self-government. But if any person tells us that India is today fit for self-government on colonial lines, we would unhesitatingly say that he has hardly any conception of the condition of life in India, has hardly any acquaintance with the capacity and character of the people."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 14th, 1916.

Home Rule for India.

9. In a leader on this subject, New India, of the 14th September, states:—"Just a year ago today, the editor of New India, in Bombay, expressed her preference for the term Home Rule over that of self-government; under the term 'Home Rule' separation can never be implied, and it marks out the object of our movement, to obtain, by constitutional and law-abiding means, self-government within the Empire. . . . . The idea of Home Rule, and the steady setting of the current of Indian thought towards that idea, these are the characteristics of the year. We looked to a long and toilsome propaganda to popularise the idea, but lo! it has sprung full-formed into the light, as Athene from the head of Zeus. We can only look wonderingly at the unexpected phenomenon, and say: 'It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.' There is every sign of a divine activity in the feebleness of the means and the immensity of the result. Villagers talk of Home Rule; who has reached them? The town populations acclaim it vociferously; who has roused them? Dadabhai Naoroji blesses it from his hermitage at Varsova; little children babble of it in the busy streets. . . . . Let us lift up our eyes to the hills, to the Himalayas and the Nilgiris, where still great Rishis, India's guardians, dwell, watch and work. Brahman is fearless, and 'Thou art That'. Our mighty Mother stretches out a loving hand to her children, dwelling in the little Island of the Northern Seas, and the two lands, so strangely brought together in modern days, shall walk on, with linked hands, to a fair and joyous future."

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

The Congress Presidentship.

10. United India and Native States, for the week ending 7th September,* has the following:—"We are afraid that we cannot commend the action of the Reception Committee of the Congress over the election of Mr. Ambica Charn Muzumdar who has received the largest number of votes of the Congress Committees to the presidency of the next Congress. Mr. Muzumdar secured five votes, while Mrs. Besant secured two; nevertheless the Lucknow politicians have thought fit to set aside the verdict of the majority of the Congress Committees. Members of the Congress, are, as a rule, unsparing in their condemnation of autocratic methods in their rulers that we feel bound to confess that the autocracy of the Reception Committee of the Congress overshadows the doings of the most pronounced bureaucrat."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, Sept. 9th, 1916.

11. In commenting on the speech delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy at the recent session of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Karnataka, of the 9th September, says:—"If on landing at Bombay or arrival at Delhi, a grandiloquent adumbration of policy would have looked too conventional and unreal on the lips of the new Viceroy, a dry and halting pronouncement today after five months, can only be attributed, at best, to a certain deliberate reserve and aloofness of disposition. It is extremely to be regretted that at a time when iridescent aspiration on the one side and recrudescent repression on the other are agitating the public mind throughout the land, the successor of Lord Hardinge should have made his first important official utterance so unlike the speeches of that most beloved of Viceroys not only in manner, but also in substance. . . . . The one word which sums up the feelings with which that address has been received by the Indian press is 'disappointment.' His Excellency has not vouchsafed a single word as to how he and his Government view the several forces that are active at present working to affect the future of India . . . . . On points on which the public have been granted a word or two, His Excellency's pronouncement can hardly be said to go far enough. For instance, with reference to the burning question of India's industrial uplift, His Excellency was content with expressing the simple hope that the work of the Holland Commission, 'a very strong one,—will result in the stimulation of the existing industries and the foundation of others.' If the mere 'hopes'—even of Viceroys,—could bring peace and plenty to India, she should have long ago had all that her heart could wish."

The West Coast Reformer, of the 13th September, remarks:—"Lord Chelmsford's first speech in the Imperial Legislative Council delivered in opening the first session of the newly constituted council last week at Simla, was a reasonably lengthy one and touched upon various topics of public interest. It was nevertheless somewhat unhappy in having commenced with an expression of His Excellency's desire that the powers of nomination to the Imperial Council (which has a permanent official majority) should be further enlarged. In these days of national awakening in India, nothing is so much calculated to discourage public opinion as the prospect of representative assemblies being swelled with nominated members and the new Viceroy further desires to introduce the exacting principle of nominating military heroes with seats in the council. The effect of the [illegible] with for more nomination is like that of the proverbial [illegible]. Other parts of the speech do not greatly help to neutralise the first impression caused by the gesture."

knowing what he is talking about. . . . . There is only one line in which we can do something: the supply of men. Unhappily here, too, our past obstructs the path. The Government has not the necessary officers to consult extensive armies from the Indian population, and for one reason or another, to us unintelligible, the Government have consistently declined to get over that difficulty by accepting the Indian demand for commissioned appointments. The denial of the right to volunteer has also been an obstacle in our way. So, considered from any standpoint, the policy pursued in the past and in the present by the Government of India does not permit us to supply a larger army than is now fighting the enemy on four battlefields."

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 12th, 1916.

17. The Hindu, of the 12th September, states:—"We have followed with interest the controversy in the press regarding the management of our Presidency bank, and we think that at least in one respect—the representation of Indians in the Directorate of the bank—the opponents of popular opinion have signally failed to establish their case. The Bank of Madras is not an ordinary joint-stock bank; it is an institution which has at its back the prestige and influence, the authority and support of the Government: to it is entrusted the custody of public revenues and the cash balances of the local Government: and commanding, as it does, this vast and important patronage of the State, it is incumbent on it to see that it does not lay itself open to charges of clannishness or favouritism. It is admitted that Indians have a substantial holding in the funds of the bank, and this fact, coupled with the circumstance that Government gives it unstinted and exclusive support, ought to be sufficient to make Indian representation on the Board of Directors of the Bank imperative. But never since the constitution of the bank—it was established so long ago as 1843—have Indians been represented in its Directorate; and this is rightly construed as humiliating to the national pride and business capacity, if not business integrity, of the Indian commercial community. . . . . It is not merely on racial and sentimental grounds that we ask for representation in the Directorate of the Bank, though, as is evident from the tremendous agitation set up by commercial England and Anglo-India above referred to, sentiment and national pride count a great deal in these matters."

Indians and the Bank of Madras Directorate.

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Sept. 13th, 1916.

18. The West Coast Reformer, of the 13th September, writes:—"Notwithstanding the increased interest taken by the people in the affairs of the Indian National Congress, there is a lamentable lack of organisation and co-operation among the provincial and district committees. . . . . The Reception Committee of the 29th Session of the Congress at Madras had a surplus amount of money which ought to have been reasonably handed over to the All-India Congress Committee for common use or retained for congress work in this Presidency. The Reception Committee has, however, chosen to give away Rs. 5,000 to the Gokhale Memorial Fund and Rs. 2,000 to the G. Subrahmanya Ayyar Memorial Fund. We agree with those who have protested against this diversion of funds intended for one purpose to entirely different purposes. Such scant regard for propriety and constitutionalism is no proof of a capacity for self-government."

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

PEOPLE'S OPINION, Trivandrum, Sept. 13th, 1916.

19. The People's Opinion, of the 13th September, writes:—"Attention of Government was pointedly drawn in the last Session of the Popular Assembly to a very important administrative question, viz., the extreme inadvisability of one and the same individual holding the offices of the Account officer and of the Financial Secretary to Government. The member who had the shrewdness to moot this subject in the Assembly established conclusively that the combined system now in vogue is vicious in principle besides being dangerous in practice. A strong case was thus made out for the immediate separation of the two offices and the expectation of the people ran in the direction that the Government of Diwan Bahadur M. Krishnan Nayar would not tolerate any longer this absurd anomaly and unwholesome relic of the late administration. . . . . As matters stand now, whatever may be the merits or demerits of the individual officer, who is our Account officer and Financial Secretary rolled into one, we cannot, even with our utmost efforts, find any good point in a system radically defective. While in the case of all other departments a clear distinction and demarcation of duties have been brought about between the executive head of the departments and the respective controlling branch of the Huzur Secretariat, we are surprised to see that as regards the Financial Department alone, far and away the most important of State departments, such a distinction has not yet been made. . . . . We do not say that the present incumbent of the dual office has been guilty of any intentional misadvice in financial matters; but it cannot be gainsaid that for the sake of his own reputation he should not play the double rôle and give the slightest ground for a hostile critic to point his finger at."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Roumania.

20. The Kistnapatrika, of the 2nd September, says:—By declaring war against Austria and joining the Allies, Roumania has shown beyond doubt which side will win. Although victory is certain for the Allies, it will take some time for them to gain it. The three lakhs of disciplined soldiers belonging to Roumania cannot soon alter the situation. If a battle ensues with Bulgaria, she will be squeezed between Salonika and Roumania. Servia will then be freed, and the road between Germany and Turkey will be blocked. Where can Turkey then get ammunition from? She will fall prostrate at the feet of the Allies. The war has now assumed a new aspect no doubt, but there will not appear any change so soon. As stated by a Russian minister, although Germany is tired and her food-stuffs are running short, her army is still strong.

Kistnapatrika, Masulipatam, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The Ravi, of the 7th September, says that Roumania waited so long to know for certain which side will win. It states that she is now sure that victory will attend the efforts of the Allies and so she joined them. This act of hers is certainly an encouragement to the Allies and a source of discomfiture to the enemy. It remarks that the situation in Greece at present is such that either a new King will be appointed or a new ministry will replace the old one. In either case, says the paper, Greece will join the Allies.

Ravi, Coconada, Sept. 7th, 1916.

Roumania and the war.

21. In its news column the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 13th September, gives the following items:—A correspondent remarks that even though all newspapers in India write that the entry of Roumania will greatly facilitate the operations of the Allies, to what extent it will really benefit the Allies will have to be seen only by and by.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Sept. 13th, 1916.

The declaration of war by Roumania.

22. The Quami Report, of the 2nd September, referring to the declaration of war by Roumania, says:—It is now certain that the progress of the war will be very rapid. It is equally certain that the Central Powers will suffer heavily in consequence of Roumania's action, and there is no doubt that she can shake to their foundations the defence of the Balkans and Constantinople. But such things (isolated successes) are not war. Those people are greatly mistaken who think the taking of a city or the reduction of a fortress constitutes a victory.

It is not enough to capture, wound or kill a soldier. As long as the enemy's object remains undefeated and his determination unbroken by the sword, there can be no victory worth rejoicing over.

It is true, that, as a result of Roumania's intervention, there will be a change in the plan of campaign and it is improbable that Greece will remain inactive much longer. At the present moment Europe presents the spectacle of a vast shambles, and it is only those weak nations or those which are far removed from the war zone, can avoid being drawn into the vortex.

Taking these events into consideration it appears that, for the present at any rate, the participation of Roumania will not change the complexion of the war. Austria's movements will, however, receive a check. The allied armies are now engaged in an important offensive on the western Front and, if Roumania should revolutionise things in the east, she will render them valuable aid and the door of peace might very soon be opened. In any case it is an amazing event in the history of the war and we should expect more things to happen.

Quami Report, Madras, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 11th, 1916.

23. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 11th September, writes:—The condition of Greece at present is indeed very deplorable. Constantine, her King, is ill; and it is even rumoured that he has abdicated and left the country. The people of Greece are divided in their sympathies with the belligerents to the European war. M. Venizelos, an ex-Minister, is wholly in favour of the Allies, who have now taken in their hands the control of the post and telegraphs in Greece, but are indifferent towards the political cataclysm which is prevailing there. Attempts are being made by some people to set up the son of King Constantine on the throne and carry on the administration of the country in his name. Seventeen of the Grecian forts are now in the hands of the Bulgarians. Even under such trying conditions Greece appears to be determined to maintain her neutrality and permit both the parties to do what they please. "Let the stronger party win, but let me remain aloof. Better I suffer by remaining neutral rather than take the consequences of joining one or the other." Such seems to be the determination of Greece at present. For a weak party this is undoubtedly the best policy.

The sad plight of Greece.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 5th, 1916.

24. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 5th September, writes:—In the beginning of the present great war no one had even conjectured that the Balkans, whose homes were dripping with blood, would be inclined for war. Whether it is due to the exigency of the time or to fickle fortune most of the States, which were neutral at the beginning of the war, are now ready to issue ultimata.

"The effect of the war on Greece."

Political and social questions have become very complicated and now that Roumania has joined they have become increasingly so.

Reuter has telegraphed that the King of Greece has fled from his capital and the Crown Prince has been appointed Regent.

The revolution-loving ministry of Greece has by frequent changes given cause for thinking that the Allies must regard Greek policy with suspicion and not be indifferent to her movements.

There is no doubt Greece has always been far-seeing and that she has been under an obligation to the Allies, especially to Great Britain. It is doubtful whether she will allow herself to get entangled in the selfish snare of Germany, just for the sake of her Queen, and thus bring ruin upon her historic land. On the contrary it is hoped that she will endeavour to side with her benefactor Great Britain, through whose instrumentality she obtained her independence, and help to bring this awful war to a close.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 11th, 1916.

25. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 11th September, writes:—M. Sazonoff, the Russian Minister, has resigned and has been replaced by M. Strumer. M. Sazonoff is a politician of wide experience, possessed of great tact and patience. Even though it is stated that he has resigned on account of ill-health, it is the opinion of many people that this is only an ostensible reason and that the best interests of Russia would have been served by removing his grievances, if any, and continuing him in office as before. People in Russia, it is said, have no confidence in his successor, M. Strumer, who is believed to be inexperienced, hasty and thoughtless. M. Sazonoff has all along withstood the onslaughts of the Germans with considerable success, and the people who were looking forward full of hope as to the result of the war, have now begun to entertain grave fears as to the future. M. Strumer, no doubt, boasts that he will conquer the enemy countries in no time and put down Germany, but the people do not appear to have sufficient confidence in his ability to do so. As the failure of Russia in this war means, practically, danger to the whole world, the resignation of M. Sazonoff and the acceptance thereof has been looked upon as a dire calamity by thoughtful minds in all countries.

The state of affairs in Russia.

The paper next dwells upon the speech alleged to have been made by the new Minister, M. Strumer, as regards the future status of Poland and remarks:—Poland is still in the occupation of Germany and yet M. Strumer has already begun to say that Home Rule should not be conferred upon her after the war. Really speaking, the country has first to be reconquered before deciding the question one way or the other, and any discussion on the point at this critical juncture is highly impolitic. How strange that even leading statesmen should not realise the situation and indulge in such thoughtless rhapsody !

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Sept. 13th, 1916.

Suicide of a railway driver.

26. We understand that a railway driver by name Sergeant Cyril Rose committed suicide on the 6th instant by cutting his throat with a razor. A correspondent says that similar suicides are taking place all over the country on account of the disgust engendered in the minds of the people as a result of the many sufferings arising out of the war.

Malayala Manorama, Kottayam, Sept. 13th, 1916.

Travancore and the war.

27. In its issue of the 13th September, the Malayala Manorama publishes a letter from Mr. P. Punnoose, in which he requests for a supply of Malayalam books and magazines for the use of about seventy Malayalis (most of them Travancoreans) fighting the enemy at some place in Arabia under his command, and thinks it a great privilege to be called upon to render any little service to its brave fellow countrymen.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Sept. 9th, 1916.

"The oppression and tyranny in German Colonies."

28. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 9th September, writes :—For a long time people have been labouring under a misapprehension as to the significance of German civilization and no one was really aware of its real nature. But the present war removed the scales from people's eyes and the whole world has come to know what the national disposition is like and that the German nation is a barbarous, cruel and bloodthirsty enemy of European civilization.

The events of the last two years have given ample proof of Germany's inhuman methods.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

"German rule in Turkey."

29. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 11th September, writes :—Our generous readers will remember that when stating the reasons for Turkey's participation in the present war, we proved that the Kaiser wanted Ottoman aid simply to further his own ends. Those acquainted with German politics will not regard the Kaiser's pilgrimage to Jerusalem, his pretending to profess Islamic faith and considering himself to be the guardian of Mussalmans throughout the world as anything but a delusion and a snare.

Now that the Turks have realised Germany's selfish policy they are drawing off. Patriotic and aged Turks are of opinion that Turkey's salvation lies only in her promptly ceasing to side with Germany and seeking British aid.

II.—Home Administration.

Dravidabhimani, Salem, Sept. 8th, 1916.

The Police administration in this Presidency.

30. In reproducing the substance of the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 4th September, under this heading, abstracted in paragraph 38 of Report No. 37 of 1916, the Dravidabhimani, of the 8th September, says:—The Police in this country, unlike the London Police, are inclined more to exercise their powers than to move with the people in a friendly manner and earn their esteem and confidence. When they suspect an individual, they arrest him immediately and then begin to make enquiries about him. This shows a lack of detective capacity on the part of the Police in India. In every Police station there should be a library of books containing detective stories and records of past detection and experienced officials in the Police department should also publish a narration of crimes detected by them in a book form for the benefit of others.

Kerala Sanchari, Calicut, Sept. 13th, 1916.

The Madras Police.

In reviewing the report on the administration of the Police department for the year 1915, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 13th September, points out that the unpopularity of the department, which is evidenced by the large increase in the vacancies in the ranks, is to be attributed mainly to the severity of departmental punishments, to the refusal of leave to subordinate officers, and to the manner in which the constables are treated by the superior officers, and that these matters deserve thorough investigation. It endorses the opinion of the Government that those in the department should be given a day's rest in the week, and observes that, though the Government do not appear to agree with the Inspector-General in thinking that the decrease in the detection of grave crimes was due to the enhanced jurisdiction of police stations, the latter's view cannot be said to be incorrect, so far as districts like Malabar are concerned.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1916.

Police report on crime.

31. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 4th September, referring to the Police Report on the increase in crime in India, hopes that the Police will continue to endeavour to deal with this evil.

(b) Courts.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

A curious decision.

32. The Lokopakari, of the 11th September, writes:—"A Hindu gentleman of Sind in Hyderabad became a convert to Muhammadanism. He has three sons, all of whom are minors, the last being a child in arms. His wife sued for retaining possession of her children, and the District Judge has decided that the husband was entitled to their custody and that, even in the case of the child in arms, he could appoint a nurse to feed it, as he was a rich man. This is a curious decision indeed. It is really strange that the District Judge did not realise the inhumanity of separating a child from its mother. Then again how can the father in this case, who has changed his religion, be affectionate to his children following his old religion? We hope that this unreasonable decision will be reversed on appeal.

BHARATAMATA, Vijianagram, Aug. 30th, 1916.

Mr. Tilak's case.

33. The Bharatamata, of the 30th August (received on the 15th September) reproduces the article on Mr. Tilak's case from the Andhrapatrika of the 16th August, which was already abstracted on page 1483 of the weekly report.

(d) Education.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Sept. 11th, 1916.

A Government of India circular about the training course for teachers.

34. Referring to the circular sent to the Local Governments by the Government of India, calling upon them to take steps to increase the percentage of trained teachers in schools and colleges in India, the Vidyabhanu, of the 11th September, says:—We quite approve of the suggestion made in the circular that the period of training may be reduced. We do not think a person need be trained for two years to become a capable teacher. After all, it is not training alone that makes a good teacher. Experience as teachers will be a greater asset to them, and therefore we would suggest their working under experienced headmasters for some years after the formal course is over. So, the period of training may be reduced to one year and these trained men may be made to work under experienced headmasters for another year. If this course is adopted, we are sure a larger number of persons will go in for the teaching profession.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 12th, 1916.

In commenting upon the same subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 12th September, observes:—The main reason for the low percentage of trained teachers in the schools and colleges of this country is the fact that the number of persons who undergo training is very small, and this is in a measure due to the low scale of salaries paid to them. We would, therefore, suggest that either the Government of India or the Local Governments should sanction a revised scale of salaries for trained teachers in primary and secondary schools. We are glad that the Government of India has recognised this, as a suggestion similar to ours has been made in the last portion of the circular.

35. Referring to the Law College students' strike, the Andhrapatrika, of the 8th September, makes the following remarks:—The duty of teachers in the higher classes is merely to put students in the way of proper study. The Law College authorities had increased the number of working hours with a view to provide work for the Professors, whose number had been increased while the three years' course was supposed to continue. This they ought not to have done. The students are not, therefore, wholly to blame, but they would have done well to make a representation through the College Council. It is hoped that the Council will interfere and bring about harmony between the Principal and the students, and that the Educational authorities will not, under the name of discipline, punish students, who if they had entered Government service, would hold respectable appointments and discharge their duties with honour.

The Madras Law College.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

Referring to the Law College students' strike, the Andhrapatrika, of the 12th September, says:—The students re-joined the college, but they were punished with the loss of ten days' attendance. It must be admitted that they deserved some punishment for determining upon a strike without acquainting the college council with their grievances. But the punishment actually imposed is not in keeping with the leniency that is characteristic of the Principal. If a student who lost ten days' attendance should fall ill, he would have to take leave of absence and thus forfeit his claim to appear for the examination for want of attendance. We hope that the Principal will reduce the punishment to one day's loss of attendance.

The Law College students' strike.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 12th, 1916.

The Lokopakari, of the 11th September, condemns the action of the students of the Madras Law College in having struck work for the trifling reason that the Principal had increased the number of working hours in the college, and says that the Principal had no other course but to increase the number of working hours when the Law course was reduced from three to two years.

The Law College strike.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 14th September, remarks:—The conduct of these young men who are all graduates is very unsatisfactory. It is possible that the arrangements made by Mr. Davis are not suitable, but are there no ways of setting them right? Are there no higher authorities to whom the students could have appealed for redress? We very much regret to see that our students do not know how to fight against injustice in a constitutional manner. The chief duty of lawyers is to fight in accordance with law. It is altogether unbecoming that those who read for law with a view to fight for rights and justice later on should ever go on strike.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 14th, 1916.

36. The Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 13th September, writes:—The object of holding examinations by compartments is to lessen the trials of students, to whom the rule that candidates should pass in all the subjects of the examination at one and the same time works as a great hardship in those days, when the struggle for existence is so very keen. The University of Madras has already introduced this system in the case of the S.S.L.C. and B.A. examinations. If they would extend the same to the Intermediate examination also they would be laying the student world under a deep debt of obligation to them. The one purpose of holding these examinations is to find out whether a candidate has acquired a certain minimum standard of knowledge in each of the subjects prescribed for them, and if he does prove by his answers that he has reached the required standard in some of the subjects, it is unfair to take no account of it and insist that he should appear for the whole examination over again. In the Punjab students are permitted to appear for University examinations by compartments with the result that the percentage of successes there is much larger than elsewhere. We understand that the University authorities there are now considering the question of extending this wholesome rule to all their examinations. The student population of Mysore would be greatly benefited if the same rule should be introduced in the case of the Mysore University examinations also.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 14th, 1916. (English columns.)

Agricultural education in India.

37. Referring to the circular addressed by the Government of India to all local Governments inviting their opinions on the proceedings of the conference on agricultural education held in February last and giving a resumè of some of the resolutions arrived at on the occasion, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 14th September, remarks:—We, for one, think that one Agricultural College for the whole of India in some central place such as Nagpur is more than sufficient for all the Indian practical needs. We do not want the diploma course referred to above. We shall be content with the vernacular school courses. Vernacular agricultural schools deserve more encouragement than colleges. The object of the Government should be to give agricultural instruction to those engaged in agriculture and their children. Agricultural instruction to non-agriculturists will prove to be money and labour lost. A correspondent says that one agricultural college for the whole of India is more than sufficient for supplying tonguesters. The purposes of practical agriculturists should, at all costs, be better attended to. Even the central agricultural college referred to above may be made a college to train vernacular practical agriculture teachers. It is only this that will solve the agricultural problem with the minimum of cost and the maximum of results. We hope the Government of India and the local Governments and the Governments of Native States will not allow themselves to be carried away by the glamour of impracticable resolutions costing money and producing no adequate results. The resolutions of special pleaders should be carefully considered before adoption.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 3rd, 1916.

False economy.

38. The Qaumi Report, of the 3rd September, in a leader, writes:—"If the Government admit that education is a national thing upon which expenditure should not be restricted, it will not adopt a false economy which will involve the starvation of national education (Lord Crewe).

In our country as far as educational needs are supplied, others spring up. In Madras the problem of national education has not yet been solved either by the administrative ability of the Government or by the energetic efforts of the people. In proportion to the increase in primary schools interference with benefits accruing from them has been enhanced. Village schools are in a state of disgraceful darkness and the great misfortune is that the teachers who are generally paid Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 per mensem are unable to perform their chief duty. Unless the pay of teachers is increased, no advantage can accrue to the nation from such schools, pedagogues or education.

The condition of aided schools is still more deplorable while private institutions are becoming worse and worse. All this is due to the limited nature of public and private aid. Our teachers' salary is less than that of a motor-car driver while his dress and appearance is inferior to that of a white-clad butler. Although this state of affairs existed before the war, this world-wide sanguinary struggle has now called for economy. Consequently many schools have not been built and many proposals have not been sanctioned. Economy is the order of the day. The rulers in their speeches and officers in their replies plead economy.

There are many villages in the Madras Presidency which are in urgent need of Muhammadan schools. Mussalman boys are obliged to regard their schools as their final colleges owing to the absence of suitable institutions. They have no hostels nor have they means to enable them to proceed to large cities for the purpose of prosecuting their studies.

Unfortunately the circle of Muhammadan Inspectors is becoming more and more contracted. Sub-Assistant Muhammadan Inspectors, owing to their small salaries, are as embarrassed financially as they are limited in their scope of influence.

In the whole of Southern India, in spite of its great size, there is not a single Muhammadan Inspector of Schools! Two solitary Assistant Inspectors shine like the greater and the lesser lights in the inspectorial firmament. One of these luminaries, Khan Sahib Khaja Khan Sahib, B.A., is on long leave and is probably counting his days. The other Mr Muhammad Husain, B A., has retired!

Although apparently this has no connexion with Lord Crewe's "False enonomy", but his "National education" certainly has. Can we be assured that our national education will not be starved? The truth of Lord Crewe's concluding words should not be obscured, viz., if national education is to advance, all the branches of the teaching profession should be more respected and a progressive scale of salaries laid down.

(e) Local and Municipal.

39. Referring to the Administration Report of the Madras Corporation for 1915–16, the Swadesamitran, of the 8th September, observes:—The report shows that the Corporation is suffering much from want of funds. There are certain items of expenditure which the Corporation has to meet from the income from taxes, and there are certain other items which have to be met from borrowed money. It is really regrettable that the Corporation should have spent away the five lakhs of rupees, which was the preceding year's surplus in the income from taxes, on the laying of pipes, construction of drainage works, electric lighting, etc., for which borrowed money should have been used and found at the end of the year that it had not funds enough for items which had to be met from the income from taxes. The credit of the Corporation was saved only by the Government grant of four lakhs of rupees. If the Corporation felt that it could not proceed with the drainage works, etc., it should have promptly applied for a loan from the Government for this purpose and should, on no account, have utilised the income from taxes for it. The Government is as much interested in the sanitation of this city, which is the head-quarters of this Presidency, as the Corporation. So the Corporation would have been justified in insisting upon the Government sharing its responsibility in the matter of improving the sanitation of the city and contributing its mite towards the expenditure thereon. As it is, the Government helps the Corporation only if it likes. There is no certainty regarding the extent of this help in any particular year. So the Corporation should raise this question again and try to get a definite contribution every year towards its expenditure. Mr. Molony says that, as the Corporation has done many things which a Municipality has to do, it is quite natural that it should feel the want of money. The important duties of a Municipality are to improve sanitation, secure facilities of water-supply, road communication and lighting and provide for primary education. Each division of the Corporation has not yet been provided with even two primary schools. The sanitation of the city is not very satisfactory. So it cannot be said that the Corporation is spending sufficient money on items which are beneficial to all the people. The lighting-tax, for example, is collected for the purpose of maintaining the lights in the city, and it is not desirable to use this income for any other purpose. It is because this is mixed up with the income from other sources that it becomes merged in the general expenditure and there is a deficit in the amount of money required for lighting purposes. When every house is paying a separate tax for lighting, there is no justification whatever for removing even the existing oil lamps from some of the streets.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

The sad plight of the Madras Corporation.

40. In the course of its comments on the report published by the President of the Corporation of Madras on the working of the Corporation during 1915–16, the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th September, writes:—The President suggests in his report that legislative authority should be given to the Corporation to impose fresh taxes. On reading the report, we are led to suspect that provisions empowering the Corporation to raise taxes have been embodied in the amending Bill now under consideration. Had the Bill, which affects the interests of the public, been published and an opportunity given to the people to criticise it, much unnecessary agitation could have been avoided. We are at a loss to know why Mr. Molony, who has been laying so much stress on the necessity of the Corporation of the people in Municipal matters, has not requested the Government to take the opinion of the public on the proposed Bill. We request that the President will take every opportunity to save the poor rate-payers from the imposition of fresh taxes.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

The Narasaraopet Municipality.

41. In commenting on the order of the Government on the report of the Municipality of Narasaraopet, the Andhra-patrika, of the 11th September, says:—The tax on carts carrying water in the town, which is notorious for its water scarcity, has increased the price of water. The Collector hoped that, in case the municipal authorities should remit the tax, the controlling authorities would not object to it. It is strange to find that the Secretary to the Government has altogether overlooked this point.

Only 13·8 per cent of the toll-gate proceeds was laid out on roads in this municipality, wherein road materials were cheap. The Collector anticipating that the Government would not fail to pass orders thereon directing the expenditure of the total toll-gate proceeds on roads, expressed a hope that no such orders might be passed. But will Secretaries to Government yield to such observations? The Secretary to Government has, perhaps, felt that it would be compromising his dignity to pass over this point without a remark. He, therefore, remarked that this expenditure was obviously inadequate.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 8th, 1916.

The Chairmanship of the Mangalore Municipality.

42. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 8th September, writes:—We understand that the period of councillorship of Dr. Verghese, one of our nominated councillors who had been elected to the chairmanship some weeks ago, having ceased, he has ipso facto vacated his chairmanship also and that the question of a chairman for our municipality has arisen once more. When on the last occasion we made our comments, a bit too late to be of any use at the time, as regards his election to the place we little thought that the question would crop up so soon as this. That the election of Dr. Verghese, an official and a stranger to the district, to the responsible position was most unpopular with the public of Mangalore has been more than proved by the several letters which have appeared in our own columns from time to time, and we have every reason to hope that neither Dr. Verghese, who should have seen what an undignified controversy his election created nor any other official having the least regard for self-respect would care to stand for election on the present occasion. If unfortunately our surmise proves incorrect and a Government official does stand for election, then the duty of the councillors is clear. They have simply to decline to vote for him. There is no rule nor custom binding upon them that they should vote for officials. But then there is the ever-present danger of some of our weak-minded councillors yielding to private official pressure, and this can be put an end to only by the Government strictly prohibiting their officials from either standing as candidates for election or manipulating the votes. Unless and until this is done and the right of having a non-official Chairman is given to the people, it will be a mere boast on the part of Government to say that they have conferred the privilege of local self-government upon the people.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

The views of the President of the Corporation.

43. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 7th September, referring to certain remarks made by the President (Mr. Molony) of the Corporation regarding the health of the Madras City and the cause of the increase in the death-rate among Muhammadans as compared with that of other communities, says:—"We do not understand why the President should shirk the responsibility and throw the blame on the unfortunate Mussalmans by remarking that they do not act in accordance with the rules of hygiene and that the Gosha system which prevailed in Arabia, about fourteen centuries ago need not necessarily be observed now in the dirty and filthy streets of Triplicane. The President himself admits the filthiness of the streets, and it is really a fact that there are scores of such dirty streets in Madras and that the roads are neither properly repaired nor cleaned. The condition of most of the streets is such that even with a little rain the water stagnates for a week or fortnight and gives off offensive smells. Would that the President himself would inspect the dark and narrow streets of Triplicane, especially in bad weather, it would be perfectly plain to him that the cause of the increase in the number of deaths and diseases is not the Gosha system, but the want of efficient street scavenging. On the other hand, the condition of the streets where Hindus live is better than that of the streets occupied by Muhammadans, while the state of those where Europeans live is better than that of those occupied by Hindus This is the secret of what the President explains to be the causes of the increase in the death-rate. We can show that there is not a single rule in the Islamic sacred law at variance with natural law. Among Hindus there is not to be found one-tenth of what Islam teaches regarding the ceremonial purification and cleanliness observed by most Mussalmans, and yet, if complaint is made of the increase in the death-rate among Mussalmans we cannot understand whether it is due to the filthiness of the streets or some other cause. We can emphatically assert that if the condition of the streets where no Gosha system prevails be as bad as that of the streets in Triplicane, the number of deaths in the former would be comparatively greater than that among Mussalmans."

We hope the President will see about having the streets cleaned and then ascertain if the same high death-rate prevails. Should it be so, then his criticisms on the Gosha system will be justifiable. We shall in the near future publish arguments to prove that the Gosha system is not injurious to health.

"Sanitation in Madras."

44. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 8th September, writes :—Every Government is responsible for the welfare and safety of its subjects and for satisfactory arrangements for the preservation of life and property from destruction. JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

Although Hospitals, Post offices, Telegraphs, Railways and Municipalities exist everywhere yet it is not possible for any people to enjoy the numerous facilities and comforts with which British subjects are blessed.

The editor, referring to last year's Corporation report, says. "We sincerely hope that there will be a decrease in the number of deaths next year, and that the officers of the Corporation will spare no pains in their endeavours to efficiently discharge their duties."

A circular of the Director of Industries.

45. Adverting to a circular issued by the Director of Industries to the Managers of certain schools, calling for applications from 40 European or Eurasian boys to be taken as paid apprentices in the Government glass factory, which is to start working in six weeks, the Swadesamitran, of the 8th September, says :—Is it only Europeans and Eurasians who are fit to be trained in a glass factory ? It was expected that the appointment of Mr. Couchman as the Director of Industries will lead to this department taking greater interest in the advancement of Indian industries. But his circular would make one think that he takes an interest only in European and Eurasian youths. SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 9th September, refers to the same subject and observes :—We are grateful indeed to the Government for having decided to establish a glass factory in Madras, and we are sure that this factory will, in course of time, develop into a profitable concern and be taken over by a private firm like the Aluminium Factory. But we do not approve of Mr. Couchman having called for applications from only Europeans and Eurasians for apprenticeships in this factory. We cannot see what connection there is between a glass factory and Europeans and Eurasians. Cannot boys HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 9th, 1916.

belonging to other classes learn this work? This circular gives room for the impression that the Government is starting this factory to open a source of living to European and Eurasian youths. But as Indian youths are as acute as European or Eurasian youths in picking up work in any factory, it is not desirable that the Indians should be shut out from it. So we must insist upon Indian youths also being taken as apprentices in this factory. The Madras Times and the Headmaster of Bishop Corrie's Grammar School complain that 4 annas a day is too low a wage for European and Eurasian youths. But as this is sufficient wage for Indian youths, we would request the Government to give an opportunity to the Indians to learn work in this factory.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

Queen Victoria's Proclamation.

46. The Prapanchamitran, of the 8th September, writes:—One of the promises contained in the Proclamation of Queen Victoria is as follows: "We are bound to our Indian subjects by the same obligations as bind us to our other subjects. We shall, by the grace of the Almighty, discharge these obligations faithfully and conscientiously." The meaning of this promise is clear. It is that the Indians will be ruled by the same laws and regulations by which the Englishmen are ruled. This promise has been ratified by both Houses of Parliament. So the right of self-government has been granted to the Indians by our Sovereign, the British Parliament and the British public. It is now 58 years since the above promise was made and yet the English officials conducting the Indian administration do not seem to take any interest in fulfilling this promise. Though the English Kings and many statesmen are willing to fulfil it, men like Lord Curzon appear on the field and prevent its fulfilment. We desire for equality with the other subjects of the British Empire, Australia, Canada and other colonies of this Empire have the privilege of spending their revenues, of providing for their own defence, and of securing their own conveniences It is only this condition that we wish for. There is no doubt that the English rule has conferred on us numerous benefits, such as internal peace, education, and facilities of communication. But there is equally no doubt that the economic condition of India is going down day by day, and that there is not one year in which she is not subject to a famine. This fact is testified to by many English experts themselves. No sane man will deny our assertion that the present system of education is not a sound one, that our artisans have become helpless on account of the industries of the country having been ruined and that our merchants are unable to make headway against foreign competition. The only remedy for all these evils is for us to manage our affairs. That is why we entreat the English people to raise this country to the level of the colonies and treat us with kindness. South Africa rebelled against England and waged a fierce war for two years and when peace was concluded the Englishmen gave it freedom and constituted it a colony under the British Empire. That is why it is now showing its gratitude by helping the English to root out the Germans from Africa. India has not raised its little finger against the Government nor will it ever do so. For the last 32 years the Indian National Congress has been constitutionally pointing out the grievances of the Indians and imploring the English authorities to redress them. But the latter have paid no attention to it. So we now pray the English King and the English people to fulfil the promise made in the Proclamation of Queen-Victoria. It is expected that, at the end of this war, there will be a readjustment of the constitution of the British Empire so as to bind the different units of the Empire together by a closer tie and to improve the condition and prospects of each unit. All that we pray for in the case of India is that, in this readjustment, the promise contained in the Proclamation of Queen-Victoria should be "faithfully and conscientiously" fulfilled. We wish that England, which is the seat of liberty, should give us swaraj. Our aim is that England and India should be always bound together by a tie of love. The only way of doing this is for England to grant us swaraj and bind us to her by ties of everlasting gratitude.

47. In commenting upon the first speech of the new Viceroy in the Imperial Legislative Council, the Prapanchamitran, of the 8th September, says:—We are not quite satisfied with this speech. It is the public opinion and it is also a fact that the members nominated to the Legislative Council by the Government always nod their heads to whatever the officials say. Therefore genuine attempts are being made by eminent patriots to get the right of the Government to nominate members to the Legislative Councils abolished and to make these councils entirely representative in their character. So the statement of Lord Chelmsford that the Government should have power to nominate a larger number of members to these councils is against public opinion, and we very much regret that he should have given expression to such a view. He also stated that he had nominated a member to the Imperial Legislative Council as a representative of the Indian troops, in appreciation of the services of the latter. No one can admire the valour of our troops more than we do. But is giving them a representative in the Legislative Council the only way of honouring them? They will be honoured much better by their grievances being redressed and by their being given the higher appointments in the army, like the Europeans. The Legislative Council should consist of men with liberal views, who realise that they are responsible before God for safeguarding the rights and privileges of crores of people. If, instead of this, it should comprise a number of figure-heads, it can serve no useful purpose. Our readers are aware that the provision, in the Bill to amend the Indian Consolidation Act, abolishing the right of the British Indian subjects to sue the Secretary of State for India was dropped on account of the public opposition to it. It was stated by the Viceroy that it was dropped only for the present, and that it would be taken up for consideration again after the end of the war. We really regret to learn that a provision, which has been dropped now, will be reconsidered after the end of the war, when we are anxiously expecting that our existing rights will be enlarged. As regards the condition of the country, the speech of the Viceroy was of a non-committal character. He said that he was trying to find out the root-cause of the present condition of Bengal and to eradicate it. But he did not say what the root-cause is. Certain orders recently passed by the Madras and Bombay Governments have caused great dissatisfaction among the Indians. We are surprised to see that His Excellency has made no mention whatever of these orders.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

The Viceroy's speech in the Legislative Council.

The Lokopakari, of the 11th September, comments upon this speech in the same strain as the Prapanchamitran of the 8th September 1916.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

The Viceroy's speech in the Imperial Legislative Council.

48. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th September, observes:—The discussion which took place in Parliament about the Bill to amend the Indian Consolidation Act, which is described in detail in the Home papers received by the last mail, clearly brings to light the fact that the Government of India was in favour of the provision in the Bill, which was subsequently dropped, abolishing the right of the British Indian subjects to sue the Secretary of State for India. It is really regrettable that, even in the case of trifling administrative reforms, the Government of India should have cared more for its own powers than for the progress of the country. This does not give much encouragement to the Indians in the matter of the Imperial reforms, which they are anxiously expecting to be introduced after the war.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 9th, 1916.

Reforms in India.

49. The Mahavikata Dutan, of the 9th September, says that the majority of the higher appointments in India is held only by Europeans, who are paid fat salaries, that these persons turn out no work whatever practically, the whole of it being done by the subordinates, and that the salaries paid to these officials can well be spared and utilised for some other useful purpose.

MAHAVIKATA DUTAN, Madras, Sept. 9th, 1916.

The higher officials in public service.

MAHAVIKATA DUTAN, Madras, Sept. 9th, 1916.

Mrs Besant and the Government.

50. The Mahavikata Dutan, of the 9th September, thinks that the tone of the articles in New India was really objectionable and especially Mrs. Besant's taunt at the Government not having taken any action after demanding security from her, and it is of opinion that she has to thank herself for the dangerous predicament in which she and her press are now placed.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 2nd 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 2nd September, says:—In regard to New India, Mrs. Besant has appealed to the High Court. But on an examination of the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in the Comrade case, we do not believe that the Madras High Court will see its way to cancel the order of the Madras Government. The Press Act has given very large powers to executive officers. Even the Privy Council cannot do anything unless the Act is repealed. If the Government had formed an idea of the extent to which their acts of repression had exasperated the people, they would not have ventured to do those acts.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

Swaraj and the distinction of caste in India.

51. The Hindu Nesan, of the 11th September, writes:—One section of the people say that differences arising out of caste, religion, etc., are obstacles in the way of India acquiring swaraj. But it is only swaraj that will help to remove these defects gradually. In no country, which is enjoying swaraj now, have the people attained perfection either in knowledge or in justice or in character. Perfection is a thing which is found nowhere in this world. Some say that the habit of regarding a section of the people as untouchables is found only in India. But this is found even among the westerns. Otherwise why should not Europeans travel with Indians on the railways? Why should the Indians be prevented from building houses, etc., near the European quarters in Ootacamund? Why should the Indians be prevented in some places from setting foot in parks used by Europeans? Why should the Indians be prevented from becoming members of European clubs or associations, however high their status or culture may be? Why should certain high appointments under Government be given only to Europeans, when capable Indians are available? Why should the Indians be driven away from the British colonies? Why should the Indians in South Africa be prevented from going along some of the roads and entering some of the markets used by the Europeans there? Why are not the Indians admitted into some portions of America? Why are not the Indian students admitted freely in the colleges and factories in England? If it is a crime on the part of the Indians to treat a certain class of people as untouchables for some reasons, is it creditable for the westerns to consider all the people of a country like the Indians to be untouchables and keep them down without giving them any rights or privileges?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 12th, 1916.

The condition of Indian coolies in the plantations in Ceylon.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 12th September, publishes a full report of the proceedings of a meeting of the planters of Ceylon in which it was resolved that the Government should be approached to reform the existing law relating to these coolies, in order to improve their condition, and observes:—It is clear from the proceedings of this meeting that the planters of Ceylon seriously apprehend the intervention of the Government of India in the matter of permitting Indian coolies to emigrate to Ceylon. They seem to be very much afraid of the Madras and Ceylon Governments taking into their consideration the report of the Commission appointed by the Ceylon Government to enquire into the condition of the Indian coolies in a certain province of Ceylon. This shows that the Imperial and the Local Governments intend moving in this matter and, if so, we wish they ascertain the public opinion on this subject here. For this, we would suggest that the correspondence on this subject between the Government of India and the Madras Government on the one hand and between the Madras and the Ceylon Governments may be published in all the papers and public opinion called for thereon. The criterion on which reforms should be introduced in this matter should be the interests of the Indian coolies and not those of the planters. Before deciding what reforms are necessary to improve the condition of the Indian coolies in Ceylon, we would urge the decision of the question whether it is after all necessary, in the interests of this country, to permit Indian coolies being taken elsewhere, subject to any conditions.

53. The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, reports Mrs. Besant to have said thus at the first meeting of the Home Rule League:—I have proved by statistics that India is poverty-stricken. I pointed out the disabilities of the people. I proved that the percentage of deaths in this country is very high. It is therefore that the Governor of Bombay passed his order against me, fearing that there may be a breach of public peace. Do not forget the distinct utterances of Mr. Gokhale in the Imperial Legislative Council. His figures were never contradicted. The bureaucrats saw in Mr. Gokhale one who knew the affairs of the country better than they. When they said that the people were growing more and more happy, he proved that the reverse was the case.

The Home Rule League.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

54. In commenting on the opening speech of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford in the newly-formed Imperial Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, says:—Lord Chelmsford could have given his definite views on the questions which are now agitating the minds of the Indians. He has not spoken even one word on the subject of the Press Act, in regard to which there is now so much agitation going on in this country. He referred in terms of praise to the help rendered by India to England both in men and money at the present crisis, but it is regrettable that he kept silent as to what steps he meant to take to form an Indian Volunteer Corps. We entertained hopes in this direction when we heard that he, a military officer, was to be appointed as the Viceroy of India, but we were disappointed. Referring to the political dacoities and murders in Bengal, Lord Chelmsford said that he had yet to find remedies which would go to the root cause of the evil. In one of his recent speeches Lord Carmichael has suggested that the measures to be adopted to root out anarchy from the country should be liberal. Lord Chelmsford has not expressed his concurrence in this matter with Lord Carmichael. He spoke very little on the subject of local self-government, and he attached no value to the question of self-government. He said that his powers of nomination to the Imperial Legislative Council were very small, and thus gave room for the suspicion that he meant to strengthen the official element in the Council and make the representatives of the people still more voiceless. Under such circumstances, we doubt whether we will ever have the self-government promised by Lord Hardinge. Lord Chelmsford spoke sympathetically regarding indentured coolies, and his utterances on the subject of provincial fiscal autonomy are encouraging.

Lord Chelmsford.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

55. Referring to the glass industry that is soon to be started in Madras, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th September, says:—Mr. Couchman, the Director of Industries, has written to the Managers of European and Eurasian schools to select and send well-built young men to work in the factory. It is not known whether he similarly addressed the other institutions. We do not say that the Europeans and the Eurasians should not be given an opportunity. What we say is that it is unfair to exclude Indians without trying them. We trust that Mr. Couchman will reconsider the matter and give equal opportunities to the Indians, or publish his programme and call for the opinion of the public before acting upon it.

Glass industry.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

56. The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th September, says:—We feel gratified that the experiment to utilise the services of the co-operative societies for improving sanitation in villages which are not served by unions, has borne fruit. The Government have now issued orders empowering the Presidents of District Boards to use their discretion and utilise the services of Co-operative Societies freely for improving sanitation. But if instead of entrusting this one work of sanitary improvement to Co-operative Societies, the Government appoint soon village panchayats with judicial powers, and entrust them among other things with power to carry out reforms in sanitation, the people will sooner than under the proposed arrangements, gain the capacity to administer their own affairs. The panchayats will show in every department of their work the skill that the Co-operative Societies have shown in the improvement of sanitation.

Sanitation and Co-operative Societies.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 8th, 1916.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Sept. 8th 1916.

Loans to fishermen.

57. In its leader on the subject of fisheries in Madras, the Sasilekha, of the 8th September, says:—Co-operative Societies should be started which will help the poor fishermen of the Madras Presidency with loans. Till then the Government should try to develop the trade in fish by advancing loans to them.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 9th, 1916.

The Nellore cattle.

58. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th September, contains a letter in which the writer complains that in the case of Nellore cattle sent to the forest reserves of Cuddapah for purposes of grazing, the grazing fee has been raised from Re. 0-4-3 to Re. 1 per head of cattle, and the order has been issued that during nights the cattle should not stay where they have grazed during the day. The paper hopes that the Collector of Nellore and the other authorities concerned will enquire into the matter and relieve the Nellore ryots from the above hardship.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The nationalists.

59. The Kistnapatrika, of the 2nd September, says:—Among the nationalists, it is Mr. Tilak that ventured to say some twelve years ago before the Decentralization Commission that the vernacular of a province should be its official language. It is not known why this doctrine did not spread among the nationalists in those days. But ever since Mr. Kelkar toured in the Telugu country, this view has struck its roots deep in it. The Andhra movement has well digested this doctrine, and has therefore ripened into a nationalistic movement of greater magnitude than the Bengal, the Bihar and the Orissa movements.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

India's poverty.

60. The Kistnapatrika, of the 2nd September, has an imaginary dialogue between a teacher and two youths, from which the following are extracts:—

Teacher.—Until we shall have self-government and a strong Indian army, our industries will not thrive. Financial independence and industrial progress are correlated.

* * * * *

Teacher.—If the Forest Act be repealed and lands are granted for the people and the cattle to stay in, many can earn a livelihood by breeding cattle and exporting them from India. There are a lakh and twenty thousand miles of forest in India. If all this is utilised for purposes of breeding cattle, India shall also have an increased number of cattle as Australia. . . . .

Teacher.—The rulers themselves have to carry out the chief reforms by which the poverty of the country can be got rid of. They are—

(1) Permanent revenue settlement should be introduced in all provinces.

(2) The Forest Act should be amended.

(3) The ryot population should be made incapable of division and the fruits of cultivation available only to the ryot.

(4) (If possible) property should be made to devolve undivided on the eldest son or should be made alienable by will.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

Medical aid.

61. In commenting on the inadequacy of the medical aid rendered by the Government under the western system, the Andhrapatrika, of the 11th September, quotes the instance of the branch Municipal Hospital at Guntūr in which, according to a remark of the Surgeon-General, patients are treated at the rate of one person every minute, for five hours a day, the doctor having hardly any time to think and prescribe medicine in each case. The Governmant cannot appoint more doctors for want of funds. While the Government of India has admitted the importance of the indigenous systems of medicine, the Provincial Governments, especially the Government of Madras, have not done so. The paper is at a loss to know why our Surgeon-General, who knows that western medical aid cannot possibly be rendered to all, does not help to spread and develop the eastern systems.

Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

62. In its leader on the celebration of the birthday anniversary of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, the Desamata, of the 6th September, reports Mr. Naoroji to have said as follows:—What benefits India benefits England also. The stability of the British Empire rests on a solution of the Indian problem. If the present-day politicians do not direct the new forces that have been generated in India into channels that promote the advancement of the empire and bring satisfaction and prosperity to the people, these forces may turn against the British Government and bring about a great catastrophe.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Sept. 6th, 1916.

Merchant vessels.

63. In its leader on merchant vessels, the Andhrapatrika, of the 12th September, says:—Almost as a matter of necessity we require the articles that we now import from foreign countries. In purchasing them we are enriching the foreigners while we ourselves grow the poorer for it. In this age of commerce and industries, there is nothing more helpful than a collection of merchant vessels. Every country enjoining any independence has toiled to construct and possess a number of such vessels. The Philippine Islands for instance had 191 steamships and 489 other ships in 1913. If India has the sympathy of the Government, she can surely have such ships at an early date, but the people should gird up their loins and begin work. If India wishes to rise to eminence, her sons should at once construct a strong fleet of trading vessels.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 12th, 1916.

Cotton industry in India.

64. Referring to a meeting held in Mysore to consider the desirability of starting a cotton mill there, the Mysore Star, of the 10th September, writes:—Out of about 250 millions of yards of cloth that India needs for her requirements annually, only about a fifth is manufactured in this country and the rest is mostly imported from Manchester. This clearly shows that we have ample scope for further development of the cotton industry in India. But we note with deep regret that even after the lapse of over half a century since the cotton mills were first established here, the industry does not appear to thrive as well as it ought to. Really speaking, if only we should turn into manufactured goods all the raw cotton that is produced in this country there would be little or no need for us to go in for foreign-manufactured cloth; but then, only about a fourth of the raw cotton is thus utilised here and the rest is all exported to foreign countries. That our country which produces cotton in such large quantities and has such a ready market for finished cotton goods should not be able to develop the industry here, while the merchants of Manchester who have to import every pound of their cotton from foreign parts thrive so well, is chiefly due to the fact that our Government have given every advantage to the foreign manufacturers over the local men by way of permitting their goods to dump the Indian markets duty-free and at the same time imposing a duty upon the locally-manufactured goods and thus preventing the Indian mill-owners from competing with them at least on terms of equality. . . . . Past experience amply proves that it is this unfair competition that is really at the bottom of our misfortune in this respect. It is too much to expect our English rulers to put down the Manchester merchants and at their expense encourage the industry in India. The one way, therefore, which is open to our mill-owners to attain success in their business is to under-sell the foreign manufacturer; and this, after all, is not such difficult task seeing that labour in India is cheaper, and we have not to pay for the conveyance to and fro of raw and manufactured goods to the same extent as our rivals.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Sept. 10th, 1916.

Mussalmans and the future.

65. The Qaumi Report, of the 4th September, writes:—The future is surely coming and people are preparing for it. Some vehemently urging people to wake up and be ready.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1916.

In every part of the British Empire preparations are being made for the future. Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Ireland, which like ourselves are subject to the British Crown, are receiving promises and expecting their future rights.

There is no doubt that the future will come and that it will begin when the war is over.

India should also get ready and the Hindus are assuring the country that we (Mussalmans) also shall have a share of the coming favours.

Muhammadans in general are silent partly because they do not know the future, and partly because they do not trust the future, while some think whatever they are to get they will get, and hence there is no necessity for causing any agitation about it. A few Mussalmans are, however, openly siding with the Hindus in the belief that they will surely have a share in the good things of the future.

But the majority of Mussalmans have not yet realised "what is the thing we are to get in the future?" The resounding cry of the Hindus is, "Our motto is 'Home Rule', i.e., self-government."

The Government of India will be entrusted to us. We and our country will of course be loyal and subject to the King of England, but we should make the laws, levy taxes and spend them, mete out rewards and punishments and foreigners will not rule over us.

Most Mussalmans will be alarmed at this information but will merely ask if it is possible and say nothing more. They will neither trouble their minds to think nor their retentive faculty to remember. They believe in the future, but the picture placed before them seems to be purely imaginary, chimerical and talismanic.

Many will exclaim "but who are we?" Will the Hindus or the Muhammadans rule in future? If no distinction is to be observed between Hindus and Muhammadans when Home Rule comes in, and if all are to be considered inhabitants of the same country and of the same nationality, what is to be the position of our religion and community? Shall we in future chop off our own feet with a hatchet? At present we are crazy, and regard the jungle as our home stirring up the dust, measuring lands and living in the remembrance of our beautiful Laila. We shall have to become Farhads and because of the deception of friendship slay ourselves with an axe.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Sept. 6th, 1916.

"Mussalmans and the future."

66. The Qaumi Report, of the 5th September, in continuation of its article on this subject in a previous issue, writes:—

"The question is what will the Muhammadans do if affairs assume such an aspect in the future? Will they join the Hindus and make common cause or will they keep aloof? I know that both classes of Mussalmans will be found now as well as in the future, but are they both ready henceforward to give a more practical proof of their desire to defer matters to a more convenient season.

If we want to prepare ourselves according to any definite principle, we should first of all decide how far Hindus and Muhammadans would or could rely upon each other. This is a question of nationality and without arriving at a correct decision on this point we cannot enjoy any of the favours to come.

We have to reflect upon our condition with all the strength of heart and mind. We came into this country of said purpose, we of our own free will made it our home. By virtue of our exertions we obtained the Government of the country but through our negligence we lost it. Now we both are in the same ship. But our religion, our language and our civilization differ from theirs.

Our distinguishing marks differ from those of the Hindus. In these circumstances, can we both become one and if we should join them, shall we show the same reverence for their temples, beliefs, offices and monuments as we show our mosques, religion and positions?

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Sept. 4th, 1916.

An extension of service.

67. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 4th September, alluding to the extension granted to Khan Sahib Saiyid Mohi-ud-din Sahib, Sub-Assistant Surgeon attached to the Royapeta Hospital, thanks the Government on behalf of the public, and remarks that by so doing it has placed the people under an obligation.

IV.—Native States.

68. The Hindu Nesan, of the 14th September, while welcoming the statement of the Diwan of Travancore that steps should be taken to establish a separate University for Travancore, demurs to the view expressed by him that the condition of the existing schools and colleges in Travancore should be improved before trying to establish a University, and observes:—The postponement of the establishment of a University till after the existing conditions improve resembles the resolve of a man not to bathe in the sea until the waves are still. It should be noted that, in the case of the Mysore University, the Darbar resolved to start it within a specified time and did so. Why should not the same course be followed in Travancore? There are facilities enough for establishing a University in Travancore. There are now three colleges and numerous well-conducted high schools in this State. So a University can be started immediately, with these colleges as its bases and the high schools as feeders to the colleges. If there is a high school attached to the Maharaja's College at Trivandrum, this can be separated from it for this purpose. A peculiar advantage, which a University in Travancore will have over the Mysore University, is that, as there are already Law and Teachers' Colleges in Trivandrum, there could be three faculties in it instead of one. In this connection, we would suggest the Travancore and Cochin Darbars joining hands for establishing a University, as there is a college at Ernakulam which can be affiliated to this University. We hope that the question of starting a Travancore-Cochin University, as we would call it, will be taken up by these two Native States without delay and pushed through with as much earnestness and enthusiasm as was evinced by the State of Mysore.

A University for Travancore.

Hindu Nesan, Madras, Sept. 14th, 1916.

69. In the columns of the Artha Sadhaka Patrika, for July,* Mr. M. S. Puttanna, in the course of an article on this subject, dwells upon the relative merits of free trade and protection and offers the following remarks:—Different countries produce different mineral and vegetable products and in varying quantities as a result of variation in their climatic conditions, rainfall, etc. This necessitates the exchange of commodities between the different countries of the world, without which the inhabitants thereof will not be able to live happily.

The salt industry in Mysore.

Artha Sadhaka Patrika, Bangalore, July 1916.

It is easier to turn the raw material out into useful manufactured articles in the very place where it is found in abundance. This, besides rendering the product cheap and good in quality, gives employment to a large number of artisans and labourers, and tends to improve their skill. If, on the other hand, we export the raw produce itself, say wheat, to foreign countries when we have the means locally to manufacture the same into eatables, and the same wheat is reimported into our country in the shape of biscuits and such other things and sold at many times its original value, it means that we get only a small part of the money value rightly due to us and the foreign merchant pockets the major portion of the profits. This kind of trade which enables the foreign merchants to earn high rates of interest upon their money, foreign labourer high wages and the foreign railways and steamships high fares for the conveyance of goods cannot by any means be called a real trade and will not conduce to the welfare of even independent countries, while in the case of India it is simply ruinous. Seeing that over three-fourths of the capital invested in Indian trade is foreign, is it any wonder that our countrymen are becoming poorer day by day and the foreigners opulent? Again, it would not matter so much if the imports and exports were equal in value. But if even articles available locally are imported from foreign countries and sold cheaper, it will result in the gradual but certain extinction of the local workmen and merchants and of the material prosperity of the country itself. Let alone that. Often enough we import in large quantities glass, paper and such other beautiful but flimsy articles which would not fetch us a single pie, if by the slightest negligence they are broken or torn, and allow millions of rupees to go out of the country. This kind of foreign trade can never bring prosperity to our country.

* Received in the current week.

To sum up, it is harmful to the interests of the country to import raw or manufactured articles from outside if the same are, or can be, made available in the country itself.

Applying this test to the salt industry of Mysore, we find that salt is one of the articles which can be manufactured locally and that consequently it should never be imported from elsewhere. Hyder Ali and Tippu Sultan, in their day, had strictly prohibited its import into Mysore with the result that salt industry thrived in Mysore and afforded means of happy livelihood to the families engaged in it. This policy was in active operation even during the administration of Diwan Purnaya. But as the hold of the East India Company on the country became firmer, they gradually increased the taxes on the different sources of revenue including salt, and laterally began to themselves manufacture salt on seacoast towns and sell it in our province. During the period of British Commission Sir Mark Cubbon continued to maintain the old policy, but without thereby incurring any loss to the State. His successors, however, were much too solicitous of the interests of the British Rulers with the consequence that some of our minor industries began to decline since 1862, and salt began to be imported into Mysore in ever-increasing quantities. Official figures are not available to show to what extent our salt industry declined in the period covered by the 50 years of British Commission. The State came into the hands of its native rulers in 1881, but ever since that time the industry does not appear to show any signs of progress.

MALAYALI, Quilon, Sept. 13th, 1916.

Vernacular papers in Cochin and Travancore.

70. The Malayali, of the 13th September, writes the following in English:—What is the world coming to? Why is all this dirty linen permitted to be exposed and washed in public? The Sankaracharyar, a vernacular weekly printed and published in Travancore, most audaciously publishes that it has in stock the nude photos of some Nair women. Will this paper dare to publish the same in some English papers outside the State? What next? The Travancore and Cochin Darbars are sleeping over some of the most obscene and defamatory articles regularly appearing in a few vernacular papers, printed and published in these States. Will it not be possible to bring the offenders to book without introducing a Press Act? Look at the fate of people who say ugly things outside these States. But here the tables are turned, and one is eminded of that memorable passage in Shakespeare's Macbeth "Does Scotland stand where it did." ?

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

1. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 16th September, says:— "There are certain striking features common to Police administration in the various provinces. One such is the increase in the number of cases of true cognisable crime. . . . . Not only is crime on the ascendant, but there is also deterioration in its detection. . . . . There appears to be little doubt that the Police force in all provinces is lacking in efficiency; for, we find that even in cases where the season was all right and prices did not rule high, as for instance, in Madras, the failure to prevent and detect crime was very marked."

Police Administration in India.

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

(b) Courts.

2. The West Coast Spectator, of the 16th September, states:—"Several years ago there was a proposal before the Local Government to increase the pay and prospects of Sub-Magistrates. In fact; when a resolution to that effect was moved in the Council, the Government made a satisfactory reply. Time has rolled by since then, but nothing practical has as yet taken place. The economic situation having, of late, taken a turn for the worst, it is time the Government took up the matter for early solution.

"Sub-Magistrates and Deputy Tahsildars are among the hardest worked officers of the Government and they wield power and influence not commensurate with their salary. They have, further, to maintain a status and style of living. It is no wonder with an income smaller than their expenditure, some trip and fall, and we hear every now and then whispers of magisterial corruption. They may plead war economy and such excuses, but a Government who can find allowances for high public servants, drawing fat salaries must surely be in a position to find a few thousands, to give an enhanced salary to a hard-worked class of officials."

Sub-Magistrates.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 16th, 1916.

3. The West Coast Reformer, of the 20th September, remarks:—"We have been hearing some sickening accounts of the nefarious doings of certain Sub-Magistrates. The difficulty of exposure is obvious and we cannot publish all that we hear and see. The superior officers may detect the plague spots by private enquiries and keep a watchful eye. . . . . The public attention paid to the subject will have put some restraining fear in the minds of the evil-doers. . . . . The encouragement of complaints is the best possible remedy, and a 'Bureau of Complaints' instead of a law court to enquire into charges against officials will make matters easy enough. . . . . The possibility of false complaints should not deter the authorities from affording facilities for bringing corrupt practices of officials to an end."

Corrupt Sub-Magistrates.

West Coast Reformer' Calicut, Sept. 20th, 1916.

4. New India, of the 21st September, writes:—"The appointment of a European Barrister to fill the vacancy created by the death of Sir Dinshaw Davar has naturally created profound disappointment in the Western Presidency. It is an action of an unnatural kind in these days. These are times when the children of the soil should be given greater facilities in the public services, and the Bombay appointment not only denies such extension—which is a serious matter—but transfers an appointment held by an Indian to a non-Indian. . . . . The action of the Government is, therefore, fully inexplicable, unless we assume that they were anxious not to keep up the strength of the Indian element on the Bench to what it was prior to Justice Davar's death. If that be so, the grounds for disappointment are strengthened.

The Bombay High Court.

New India, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

"We do not desire to make a mountain of a mole hill; all the same, we strongly feel that the appointment should be noted by the Indian public. . . . . In fact, when we examine all the features of their decision, one is led to wonder whether there may not have been some strong reason in their favour of which the public are so far ignorant, and which we certainly cannot even guess at. And if there be such a reason, it is necessary that the Government of Bombay should disclose it, and if they do not, the appointment will leave behind it a very unpleasant feeling which is certainly not in the interests of the Empire."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

Criminal justice.

5. The Indian Patriot, of the 22nd September, observes:—"The Government order on the administration of criminal justice in the Presidency affords evidence of a higher aspiration, not merely to enforce the law and punish crime, but to improve the system under which the law is administered and to modify the law itself in accordance with advancing notions. The Madras Government have been for the past few years inspired by a more enlightened thought on the subject; and it will be found that during these years much advance has been made in the treatment of criminals."

(d) Education.

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Sept. 14th, 1916.

A school for Kallar children.

6. United India and Native States, for the week ending 14th September, writes:—"On the 1st instant Mr. Paddison, I.C.S., Collector of Madura, presided over a pleasing function, the opening of a school for Kallar children at Usalampatti. The Kallars in this locality have earned the reputation of being a notoriously criminal gang, who carry on their depredations over a wide area, even extending outside the district. The authorities recently had some trouble with the registration of the Kallars, but owing to the tactful handling of the situation by Mr. Paddison, the impasse was averted and now the Taluk Board of Usalampatti have taken the first step in the process of transforming the criminal tribe into peaceful and law-abiding citizens. . . . . We trust that Mr. Paddison's earnest exhortation has not fallen on headless ears and that in the near future the Kallars of the district will give up their criminal pursuits and lead an honourable life by joining the army where they could distinguish themselves. Mr. Paddison seems to have dealt with the Kallar problem with conspicuous sympathy and with the result that they seem likely to desist from their lawless and disreputable ways within a short time."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Ill-mannered students and Sir Sivaswami Ayyar.

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 16th September, remarks:—"Sir Sivaswami Ayyar was hooted and hissed the other day in the Presidency College by the students thereof. Naturally the Anglo-Indian papers have come out with thundering denunciations and at least one paper sees in the behaviour the influence of Mrs. Besant's speeches and writings. In England when University students howl down prominent politicians, smash windows and perpetrate other acts of hooliganism, they are set down to youthful indiscretion and exuberance, but in India when students make demonstrations, the drak spectre of sedition and disloyalty is trotted out!

"We have absolutely no sympathy with unruly students who take part in or incite such undignified and reprehensible demonstrations which are foreign to the Hindu student's nature and character. Such exhibitions must be discouraged by severe punishments, as they are subversive of discipline and good breeding. But school boys are school boys all the world over, and we have noticed here the outbursts of hooliganism in England, simply to point out the frame of mind a certain type of critic falls into when dealing with things Indian."

8. New India, of the 19th September, observes:—"This Students' Conference is a remarkable body, as being due to the work and power of organisation of the students themselves. The series of their Chairmen shows a fine succession of great Indian patriots, and the presidential addresses are, therefore, worth reading by outsiders. In Madras, the immense influence of the Missionaries paralyses student activity, and, hand-in-hand with the Young Men's Christian Association, they shape and guide all movements in schools and colleges, aided by the Government, which sees in them the best supporters of 'discipline' of the repressive kind. The strength of the Missionaries was seen in the return of the Rev. Mr. Pittendrigh to the Legislative Council, to the exclusion of so fine an educationist and so steady a friend of the students as Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar. Mr. Pittendrigh helped in the Senate to checkmate the generous efforts of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar and the Indian members, and after that has the assurance to pose as an adviser of the students!"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 19th, 1916.

The Behar Students' Conference.

9. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 22nd September, says:—"Quite recently the Muhammadan Educational Association of Southern India addressed the Government of Madras on the question of reserving a certain number of seats in the Junior Intermediate and Junior B.A. classes of the Government and aided colleges, to which Muslim students should be given preference. . . . . So far as some mufussil colleges are concerned we know, as a matter of fact, that Muslim students are given some preference in the matter of admission. While we are in perfect agreement with the request of the association that all artificial obstacles (if there exist any such at present) in their way of obtaining higher education should be removed, we do not think that it would be in the best interests of education to reserve a number of seats or confer similar privileges to any community especially as these are likely to be at the expense of the youths of other communities, under the present conditions of inadequate accommodation in colleges. . . . . The special concessions which Muhammadans ask for, whether it is the reservation of seats or award of more scholarships could be justified only on the ground that education is backward in that community. In this connection we would urge for the earnest consideration of the Government the wisdom of distributing concessions to all the backward communities alike. We have already pointed out how fruitful of mischief and disunion has been the blunder committed by the Government in the matter of political representation. While it is no doubt true that the development of the country in political as well as in other directions is dependent upon the uniform educational development of all the constituents of the population, it is also indispensable for the union and goodwill among the various communities of the country without which no healthy progress is possible that no community, whatever its pretensions to special importance, should be unduly favoured."

10. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 14th September:—"We regret to find that our repeated remarks on encroachments in the Calicut Municipality have not attracted the attention of the executive. The crime—it is nothing less than that—is proceeding fast and furious, aided, no doubt, by the indifference and chronic delays in the disposal of encroachment cases. We know, for instance, that an encroachment reported to the municipal authorities six months ago still remains as it is. We would, therefore, suggest the desirability of the Collector tightening the screw or screws loose in the machinery of civic administration."

Street encroachments in Calicut.

11. The South Indian Mail, for the week ending 18th September, writes:—"The election for the paid chairmanship of the Madura Municipality will come off on the 25th instant. The question has naturally aroused considerable discussion. . . . . We are inclined to think that the time has come definitely for all the municipalities to elect a non-official as their chairman whether paid or honorary, the reason being that the municipal administration furnishes the people of this country scope for gaining that experience necessary for befitting themselves when a substantial measure of self-government is granted to them. . . . . Election is in its real sense intended for the non-officials and the election of an official to a position where a non-official ought to be is a thing which we think will not find acceptance now. We believe that an important principle is involved in the election of the paid chairman. The difficulty in inducing capable non-official gentlemen to accept such positions raises the question whether it is desirable to have a paid yet elected chairman in any municipality and whether it is not conducive to the growth of local self-government if the paid chairmanship is abolished altogether. . . . . We believe that the time has come for the rate-payers and other gentlemen of influence in the town to decide, in a public meeting called for the purpose, in favour not only of a non-official being elected for the post but also in favour of one of the four who have been nominated."

The Madura Municipal Chairmanship.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 19th, 1916.

The water-supply of Madras.

12. New India, of the 19th September, remarks:—"The decision of the Madras Corporation to supply water to the city at a higher pressure as an experimental measure requires to be widely known. The idea will be given up if it be found that people are careless in the use of their pipes, and thus cause a serious loss of water to the Corporation. If, however, they should be more scrupulous than they now are, the experiment will be continued, so that the city will have a supply of pure water, thus adding to the healthiness of the people.

"While it will thus depend upon the people themselves whether the new experiment should be continued, we are not sure their response will be to the satisfaction of the Corporation. And the blame for that will not lie wholly on the residents themselves. . . . . Most of them belong to that vast band of people who are severely disappointed at the new kind of tap supplied by the Corporation. Apart from the greater trouble of having to unscrew it, the tap goes out of order in a very short time, thus compelling the owner to renew it twice or thrice a year. Whatever may have been the motive of the Corporation Executive in enforcing the use of the new design, there is no doubt that it is influencing the people to waste a very large quantity of water. The worry of turning the screw every time water is needed induces most people to dispense with that operation altogether—which habit is also useful in increasing the serviceableness of the tap. That is the procedure adopted in most houses in Madras, at any rate in the busy hours of the morning, and it is universal where half a dozen tenants are huddled together in a small house served by a single tap. . . . . The procedure adopted by the people may not be proper, but it is no use ignoring the influence of the new taps on the owners of houses or on the tenants. They prefer to waste Corporation water to the value of even a hundred rupees per month rather than waste a 105 seconds a day at the screw taps; and the mischief will go on unless the Corporation supplies a meter to each house—an operation too costly to be undertaken for some years to come. That is why we do not expect the new Corporation venture, laudable as it is, to prove quite a success."

Reservation of compartments.

13. New India, of the 22nd September, observes:—"A message from Bombay says that the Chief Presidency Magistrate has held that the Railway Company has a right to reserve compartments for any community. That is very unfortunate; and we hope the case will be taken up to the High Court for a final decision on the vexed law point. And if the law be in favour of the company, it is necessary to represent to the Government to change it in the interests of all fellow-subjects of the King-Emperor."

The Imperial Legislative Council.

14. The West Coast Spectator, of the 14th September, writes:—"The Anglo-Indian papers have enthusiastically taken up Lord Chelmsford's proposal to create fresh seats in the Imperial Council for the reception of military men who have rendered glorious service. This support must in itself be an eye-opener to His Excellency to the fact that there is something radically wrong in his proposal—one that will not commend itself to any Indian politician, outside Simla and Anglo-Indian circles. At any rate, it is hoped that the new Viceroy will proceed cautiously."

15. The West Coast Spectator, of the 14th September, observes:—"The Government are managing the Madras Glass Works; but the line of policy followed does not seem to be very happy. They want some glass blowers, and the Director of Industries who runs the show has ruled that only Eurasian and Anglo-Indian boys need apply. Comment is unnecessary. If this is the way they propose running new industries we can more or less realise what the nett result would be."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 14th, 1916.

The Madras Glass Works.

16. The Hindu, of the 16th September, remarks:—"An Ootacamund message says that Mr. C. G. Todhunter proceeds on four months' special duty to report on the condition of labour recruiting from South India in Ceylon and Malay States. We fail to understand why Lord Pentland's Government should not have selected an Indian, whether an official or non-official, for this duty. We should have thought that of all subjects, a work which requires an investigation into the condition of the coolies who have emigrated from South India, would be best performed by a native of the country. A Member of the Indian Civil Service who is not conversant with their language and habits and who cannot be expected to mix freely with them so as to understand their real position, is the least competent to be deputed in the matter. A European's sympathies and views are more likely to be drawn towards those held by the members of the European planting community who are the largest employers of this kind of labour, and who are interested in perpetuating the existing state of things. . . . . In our humble opinion, if the Government is not inclined to appoint an Indian exclusively on this special duty, justice and the necessity of the case require that a non-official Indian should be associated with Mr. Todhunter to make the required investigation. We hope the Honourable non-official Members of the Legislative Council will make a representation to the Government on the matter."

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Labour recruiting in South India.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 19th September, says:—"Mr. Todhunter, I.C.S., one of the Secretaries to the Government of Madras, has been placed on special duty to enquire into the conditions of Indian labour in Ceylon plantations. An Indian Civil Servant is, no doubt, omniscient, there is nothing under the sun he does not know of, from agriculture to astronomy, but still then, we have, though reluctantly and with the greatest respect, to join issues with Lord Pentland and his Council.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 19th, 1916.

"The conditions of labour life are best understood by an Indian who knows the cooly's language and can enter into his feelings which is impossible in the case of a European, however sympathetic he may be, and who has perforce, to depend upon others for many things relating to the cooly. The Government of India emphasised this principle by associating Mr. Chimanlal with the mission sent to the West India islands to enquire into the conditions of labour.

"We refuse to believe that there is no Indian capable of undertaking the task entrusted to Mr. Todhunter. Why, there is Mr. Kesava Pillai whose knowledge of the emigration questions and conditions is, perhaps, superior to anybody's including that of an Indian Civil Servant. He had repeatedly hammered on the question in the Council, and one of his last public acts was his forcible speech on the emigration resolution.

"Why was he ignored, why his wide knowledge of cooly life and language and other qualifications are not to be utilised in connection with the enquiry are matters beyond our comprehension. However, the deputation in its suggested form must create the greatest possible regret. It is very much to be regretted, but some of the recent actions of Lord Pentland's government have not commended themselves to the public. It is to be hoped that strong representations will be made to His Excellency to change the personnel of the deputation."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Reuter and Rudyard Kipling.

17. The West Coast Spectator, of the 16th September, observes:—"It is surely remarkable, says an Anglo-Indian paper, that in war time Reuter should find it worthwhile to wire two telegrams about Kipling going to Italy—first that he is going and then he is not. We do not see anything remarkable in Reuter. The erstwhile German Baron has degenerated into a purveyor of society news, for which he sometimes gives preference to political news of great importance, especially if it refers to India."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The new Member of Council.

18. The Indian Patriot, of the 18th September, writes:—"We learn from Ootacamund that Mr. H. F. W. Gillman is appointed a member of the Executive Council, Madras, on the retirement of Sir Harold Stuart. Mr. Gillman is at present the Fourth Member of the Board of Revenue, and therefore junior to so many members of the Civil Service. So far as we remember, such a promotion is unprecedented to our knowledge, with the exception of that of Sir Henry Stokes, who was raised over the heads of many of his seniors. Among these are Messrs. R B. Clegg, A. Butterworth, N. S. Brodie, L. E. Buckley and Lionel Davidson. . . . . Considerations of merit alone have prevailed in making the appointment which is undoubtedly one of the best, if not the best, that could have been made. Mr. Gillman has been known as a just and sympathetic officer and his directorship of the Forest Department has been marked no less by efficiency than by sympathy. We regretted that he should have been transferred from the Police Department so soon after his appointment as Inspector-General. Having regard to the abilities of some of those superseded, the appointment is a courageous one; and Lord Pentland has perhaps better understood than many others the qualities which his colleagues will be called upon to bring into play in the future. It also removes a possible difficulty from the path of Mr. P. Rajagopala Achari, since none of those now superseded can raise objection to his appointment on the ground of their seniority. We congratulate Mr. Gillman on his rise to a position in which he can do infinite service to the people of this Presidency. He has both the necessary equipment and the necessary sympathy with progressive aspirations which the times demand."

New India, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 18th September, says:—"We are very glad to hear that Mr. Gillman, to whom we owe the realisation of Forest Panchayats, is the new Member of Council, superseding some less sympathetic seniors."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Sept. 20th, 1916.

The West Coast Reformer, of the 20th September, observes:—"The Hon'ble Mr. H. F. W. Gillman, the Fourth Member of the Board of Revenue, is appointed Member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Madras, in consequence of the retirement of Sir Harold Stuart. Mr. Gillman's appointment will cause some surprise as there are others senior to him in service, but seniority should not be the only merit for appointment to the Executive Council. A contemporary is of opinion that the overlooking of the claim of seniority in this instance removes a possible difficulty in the path of Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achari succeeding Sir P. S Sivaswami Ayyar. We have been thinking that Mr. Rajagopala Achari had given up that hope and we are glad to infer that he has yet a chance."

The Besant Press and the Indian Press Act.

19. The following appears in New India of the 18th September:—

"Our Chief Presidency Magistrate.

"I am coming to look upon the kindly, though quite properly rigid, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Mr. C. B. N. Pelly, as 'mine own familiar friend'; he 'does his spiriting gently,' but inexorably. But that is as it should be, for a man has his duty to do, only some men do their duty as gentlemen, as does Mr. Pelly, and others as, well, not gentlemen. Earlier in the day, I had visited Mr. Bryant, the District Collector of Chingleput, another of the first class, to renounce the Commonweal and all its works, so far as the Vasanta Press is concerned. There necessarily followed the revival of it in Madras. I have brought staff, type, etc., of the Commonweal from Adyar to Madras, installing everything in a separate block of buildings in the courtyard attached to the New India House, and I went to declare my new press. Called on to give it a name, I called it the Besant Press!

"There was one curious incident. I, of course, offered the security—the highest amount again—in promissory notes. But the Magistrate wanted it in currency notes—doubtless under instructions—for Government securities are low just now. I urged the Press Act; the Magistrate thought he could have which he liked, and 'preferred' notes. I persisted in tendering the Government securities, so as to have a definite refusal, and finally Mr Pelly said: 'I refuse them,' whereat I returned them to my case. After making the necessary declarations, I departed, drew notes through a friend and sent them off. The receipt is in my hands, and I am now the unfortunate keeper of three presses. Whatever happens at the moment, India will enjoy the 'liberty of unlicensed printing' ere many years pass by, and then keepers of presses will not be at the mercy of the Government of Madras.

Government tracts.

20. New India, of the 18th September, writes:—"Government has entered the field as a propogandist, and is circulating a pamphlet, No. 1 of 'The "Real Indian Nationalism" Series' anonymous of course, but by 'An Indian,' and the content of No. 1 is 'A short general criticism of Mrs. Besant's book, India—A Nation'. This is being circulated 'On His Majesty's Service only,' and with two half-anna stamps marked 'Service'. We have no objection to the Government's entering the lists, and answering India—A Nation, if it can. But we think it is not playing the game to answer in the press, to forfeit securities, and to try to stop the circulation of the book, all at the same time."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

War emergency expenditure in India.

21. The Hindu, of the 19th September, writes:—"We think that the necessity has now arisen for rigorous scrutiny into all items of war expenditure and military supply in India. In the first place, there is likely to be in the near future a demand on the part of Britain for military supplies from India, for, we note from the report of the Committee of Public Accounts which conducted an audit of war emergency expenditure in England that the War Office contemplate suggesting to the Cabinet that India shall give some further contribution to the war. We do not know what particular contribution she will be called upon to make; but, if any contribution in addition to what she is already making is demanded, then we think that the only course for her to take to meet the demand is to make severe retrenchment in military expenditure wherever possible. . . . . The fact that India has done its best was early established by Sir William Meyer; it has since been confirmed by an examination of the situation by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford; and it should be the height of impertinence to assume that these officials, than whom no one has better opportunities of gauging the situation or has more interest to profit by it, have erred in their estimation of India's ability to do more. . . . . It is only effective prevention of waste that we urge, and, as there is reason to believe that, under the antiquated and expensive system now in vogue, such waste occurs, we think the Government of India will be well advised to enquire into the matter."

The Government's "If".

22. The following appears in New India of the 20th September:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916.

"If and When.

"It is a remarkable but none the less a true fact that every pronouncement by a Government official glitters with promises as to what could or would or will be done if . . . . the Government had money. Reading Sir P. S. Sivaswâmi Ayyar's speech the other day at Lalgudi, we came across the inevitable 'if'—this time with reference to what would be done for teachers 'if' the Government had money. It is the same everywhere. At present the excuse is the war. When the war is over, it will be the after-war effects. And when we have recovered from the after-war effects, it will be that the greatest care must be exercised to build our fortunes anew. Having built our fortunes, then we shall have to be very careful lest we be extravagant, for who knows when a rainy day may come. Pity the poor people between whom and Paradise is a Government 'if'."

The Public Services Commission Report.

23. Referring to the hope of the Leader (Allahabad) "that England 'with her greatest of Imperial traditions,' will do justice to India's claims to national liberty and justice," New India, of the 19th September, says:—"Let us hope that the Public Services Commission Report, for whose publication India is anxiously waiting, will reveal that India is at last to be recognised as mistress of her own household. Less than that India will not tolerate."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 19th 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th September, writes:—"An Anglo-Indian paper expresses the belief that the report of the Public Services Commission 'will be liberal in spirit', though it 'will not suggest such wholesale changes as extremists wish for'. We can more or less understand what the typical Anglo-Indian's view of the 'liberal spirit' is. We cannot understand what our contemporary means by changes as the extremists would wish for. Surely, nobody expects the Commission to recommend the grant of autonomy. We may plainly tell our friends that nobody will be satisfied unless and until the colour bar in the service is totally destroyed. A few more listed posts and pious expressions of hope will not do. We want the substance, not the shadow. These are the moderate's views."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 19th, 1916.

Indian Members of Executive Councils.

24. The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th September, has the following:—"A Madras contemporary publishes an article on Indians in Provincial and Imperial Executive Councils. After passing in review the achievements of individuals, the writer comes to the conclusion that Indians taken to the Councils have so far failed to give satisfaction to the Indian public. . . . . So far as Bobbili and Dharbanga are concerned, no wonder they have not reached the people's ideal. The latter does not even care to put in residence at head-quarters, and he seems to be more keen about touring in India flogging the dead horse of 'Varnasrama Dharma' than attending to his work as member of the Executive Council. . . . . An Indian Member of Council if he has the backbone, like the late Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar, can do many things. But it is not Krishnaswami Ayyars that are always wanted.

"Take the Palghat incident. In an evil moment, presumably led away by the men on the spot, who are always infallible, the late Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar smothered the Municipal Council. An angry Government order, a fiat to the trembling Councillors, demands for explanation, all created a bad situation. And we all thought that local self-government in Palghat was doomed."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept. 19th, 1916.

Provincial Governorships.

25. The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th September, states:—"Speculation is rife as to the probable successor of Lord Carmichael as Governor of Bengal. In certain quarters which are supposed to be in the know or pretend to be such, it is given out that Sir Michael O'Dwyer, the satrap of the Punjab, will be transferred to the Belvedere. This rumour has, in its turn, given an opportunity to some of our northern contemporaries to discuss the relative merits of civilian governors and administrators sent fresh from England. . . . . There has, up to now, been only one instance of an Indian Civilian having been appointed to a provincial Governorship, in the person of the late Sir Richard Temple who ruled over Bombay. But these were times when public opinion was not strong in India, and we heard less of aspirations and people's right, when the Indian Civilian was far different from his compeer of today. We would, of course, be only glad to get a Cotton or Wedderburn, but the chances of such statesmen getting a satrapy in India are very remote. . . . . An Indian Civilian is wedded to certain preconceived notions and prejudices which do not always commend themselves to people. He is trained to a certain line, and he sticks to it. Indian questions are best judged and settled by the open mind which can rise superior to local or class prejudices which a civilian is hardly capable of. The gulf between the Indian Civil Service and the people being wide, the differences of opinion between them being so very marked and sharp, only a third party can adjust these differences and effect measures that will be acceptable to those they are intended for. A politician fresh from England satisfies this condition and he is therefore the best. . . . . We do not think that there will be two opinions in India on the desirability of excluding the Indian Civil Service from the appointment of Governor. Lord Carmichael's successor will have to be appointed in England for these reasons. But much depends on the person selected. A useless spent up force, some dilapidated duke or younger son of aristocracy who has to depend upon his earnings, some political place seeker, or some politicians whom his friends in office desire to keep out of the way or provide for, will be a positive danger and useless. A politician of broad views, liberal in spirit and sympathetic in his attitude towards subject races and courageous enough to exercise his principle is the absolute necessity in the India of today."

26. New India, of the 21st September, has the following:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

"A strange statement.

His Excellency the Governor's speech at Kanadukathan.

"Speeches during gubernatorial tours are more or less conventional: all the same the following passage from His Excellency's speech at Kanadukathan requires to be noted:

In your address you point out that a representative of your community has served upon the Council ever since its reconstitution. I might add that those representatives, first Mr. Ramaswami Chettiyar, then Mr. Somasundaram Chettiyar and now Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar, have in every way been worthy of the distinction conferred upon them. That is surely a happy augury for the future. It shows that the experience and capacity which your community is able to place at the disposal of the Government have not been overlooked, and that your desire to enter and contribute more largely to the public life of the Presidency has been recognised.

"So far as the public are aware, the first two gentlemen have not done anything in the Councils of which their community may be proud. They were more or less silent, specially the gentleman nominated for the last council. We hope Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar will prove a worthy representative."

27. The Hindu, of the 21st September, observes:—"It was but the other day that the Lord Bishop of Madras wrote in the Nineteenth Century deprecating the practice of Europeans in India talking of the people of this country as a subject people, and of themselves as members of the ruling race. . . . . As a matter of constitutional principle, it is absurd to talk of a European as a member of the ruling race, and of his greater importance as a political entity on that score than an Indian. A Britisher as such has no greater political status in India than an Indian. The Queen's Proclamation of 1858 makes this perfectly clear. There is no doubt that some laws, in the making of which the people of the country have had no share, give the European, an invidious advantage in certain respects. These, however, cannot elevate his political status to a plane higher than that of the Indian. . . . . It cannot be gainsaid, however, that one of the greatest obstacles to the industrial, commercial and political development of the country is the false view of their position entertained by the members of the European Association and emphatically endorsed by administrators of the stamp of Lord Curzon." HINDU, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

The "Ruling" race.

28. The Hindu, of the 21st September, remarks:—"The Bombay Chronicle writes:—Reuter informed us the other day that 'in the Commons Mr. Asquith said he saw no reason for recommending the allotment of German Rhodes scholarships to HINDU, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

The Rhodes scholarships.

parts of the Empire which, at present, were not benefiting.' This came as an unpleasant surprise to all who considered it a bare act of justice to make over in whole or part to India the scholarships Germany has forfeited by drenching the world in blood—especially as India has so honourably and willingly shared the sacrifices necessary to withstand Germany's ambitions. It is, however, a relief to learn that the telegram cabled by Reuter was wholly misleading. It appears that what Mr. Asquith said was that the proposal to allot the Rhodes scholarships to the parts of the Empire at present excluded was being dealt with by a private Bill and he, therefore, saw no reason to make any recommendation with regard to it,—a far from disappointing reply."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

Sir S. P. Sinha.

29. The Indian Patriot, of the 21st September, writes:—"His Majesty the King-Emperor has approved the appointment of the Hon'ble Sir Satyendra Prasanna Sinha, Kt., to succeed the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda, K.C.I.E., as an ordinary member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bengal from the date on which Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda vacates the post. . . . . Sir Satyendra's qualifications for the office are undoubted; they are higher than those attained by any member of a Provincial Executive Council. He stands far higher in public estimation. He is both patriotic and courageous; and he has in him the instinct of the statesman. His advice will be most valuable in times of emergency such as may arise at any moment in Bengal; for it will be prompted alike by knowledge and by sympathy.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

"Writing on this subject, New India, of the 21st September, says:—"From Bengal comes the surprising news that Sir Satyendra Sinha has been appointed Member of the Bengal Executive Council to succeed Sir Shams-ul-Huda. This is, so far as we remember, the first time when a person, once a Member of the Supreme Executive Council, has accepted the subordinate office of a Provincial Councillor. And we are sorry to add that the person who acts in that fashion is an Indian who was honoured only last year with the Presidentship of the National Congress. . . . . What makes the present incident even more unhappy, Sir Satyendra had himself resigned his appointment in the Viceregal Council. A cynic will be tempted to ask whether he resigned that because he did not consider himself competent for the same, and accepted the Provincial Councillorship because of the less responsibility attached to it.

"Apart from this misfortune to the country and to the Congress whose leaders, at a weak moment, decided to adorn him with the highest honour in their power to give, the new appointment is very unfortunate. . . . . Such being his record in the Viceroy's Council, we are sorry he should have been appointed to the Provincial Council, in which position he has to deal with a very delicate political situation. Unhappily, Lord Carmichael, too, will be retiring very shortly, and there is little chance of Bengal getting as sympathetic and liberal-minded a Governor.

"There are very few Congressmen in the country who have not repented for their association with the efforts to elect him as the President of the last Congress session; and their repentance will certainly be keener in the light of this appointment. Thanks to that mistaken selection, the All-India Congress Committee has had no President for the last few months already, and now we have the spectacle of the President accepting a 'de-promotion'. These painful experiences will not be in vain if we keep it in view at least in the future in our Congress deliberations."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The Problem of the Commonwealth.

30. New India, of the 22nd September, states:—"The book bearing the title The Problem of the Commonwealth has attracted much attention in England and is now on sale in India, and it will interest our readers if we sketch its contents, and so enable them to grasp the views which are exercising considerable influence in the political world of Great Britain and the Colonies. . . . . Mr. Curtis quietly posits his question: Shall the dominions become independent Republics or remain part of the Empire? If a political writer here asked: Shall India become independent or remain part of the Empire, he would at once be arrested for sedition! The liberty which is the breath of life to the Briton does not exist for the Indian, though both are subjects of the same Imperial Crown, and both are, theoretically, under the protection of the British laws."

IV.—Native States.

31. The West Coast Spectator, of the 14th September, states:—"The Mysore Darbar has punished the Police Superintendent involved in the recent notorious Garudachar case in which severe strictures were passed on the conduct of the Police by the Chief Court with a transfer! A case of great cry and little wool. The 'punishment' will be received by the public with astonishment. Garudachar was put to indignities and heavy loss, and the gentleman responsible for this needless persecution escapes practically scot-free, with a change of climate. We are afraid we cannot congratulate the Darbar on its disposal of a most unpleasant affair." West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 14th, 1916.

Mysore Police maladministration.

Writing on this subject, the Karnataka, of the 16th September, says:—"Government have just ordered that Shimoga and Kadur should exchange their Superintendents of Police; and we are at a loss to know which district deserves our congratulations more. The order which is dated the 8th instant directs that the transfers should take effect 'forthwith;' but some one tells us that Shimoga is not likely to let go its benefactor before the 19th instant within which time, it would appear, the good folk of that place are arranging to give public expression to their gratitude to the departing friend. With reference to the obviously tardy manner in which Government are moving in this matter, we are constrained to observe that it does not impress the public as a just or courageous procedure. A transfer is the least that Government could order in any case; and in most cases it comes only as a favour to the person concerned. In the particular instance under reference, transfers were due months ago,—in fact when the cases against Messrs. Garudachar and Dikshit were pending; and we are astonished at the lenient attitude Government seem to have put on. But it is something that they have not altogether dropped the matter. We hear they have called for some records connected with the case from the Shimoga Deputy Commissioner's office; and it is needless to add that the whele country awaits their decision with intense interest. Let us hope their sense of justice, like the sword of Heaven, 'doth not haste to smite; nor yet doth it linger'". Karnataka, Bangalore City, Sept. 16th, 1916.

32. The Karnataka, of the 16th September, remarks:—"The frank criticism made by Dr. Srinivasa Rao of the work of Malnad improvement shows the clamant need that there is for definite and clear ideas. The suppressed murmurs in the co-operative world furnish another proof of the need for clarity and definiteness of thought. The fact that of late the Government of Mysore has been largely undertaking functions that are beyond its province,—and perhaps more than proportionately neglecting those duties that are its own,—is yet another evidence of the absence of a clear-cut political philosophy to control it. It has been our standing complaint that, in spite of expensive experts, our boasted industrial activity is all amateurish; this again points to the need for men of definite ideas. The fact is that we have all developed a cheap contempt for theories; and we have assured ourselves that mere ebullitions of enthusiasm and hazy benignant schemes are all that we need for the salvation of our race. We have deliberately omitted to cultivate scientific and studious habits of mind; and the result naturally is that our 'common sense' is often scarcely different from the 'common ignorance.' 'Common sense' would be deserving of respect only when it is fed upon ideas and clad in culture. Otherwise, it would be not common 'sense,' but common 'nonsense'". Karnataka, Bangalore City, Sept. 16th, 1916.

The Malnad Improvement Scheme.

33. The Western Star, of the 19th September, observes:—"The announcement has been made that an ordinary meeting of the Travancore Legislative Council will be held on Wednesday the 27th instant. Western Star, Trivandrum, Sept. 19th, 1916.

The Travancore Christian Succession Bill.

In itself, there is nothing out of the ordinary nothing to startle, in this announcement. There is, however, the further and momentous announcement that the business of the Council will include the final reading and the passing of the Travancore Christian Succession Bill. This information, we need hardly say, has come as a very rude and painful reminder to several thousands of the subjects of our Gracious and beloved Maharaja that a great calamity, which has been threatening their corporate existence these past three or four years, is certain to descend upon them very speedily, with the weight of a sinister and crushing thunderbolt, unless some powerful arm should be uplifted, in justice and beneolevnce, to avert and force back the on-coming incubus. As for the communities themselves who are now imminently confronted with so calamitous a prospect, is there any further necessity, at this truly deplorable juncture, to repeat that they have nearly exhausted all conceivable and constitutional means and devices to save themselves and their posterity from the fate which appears about to overtake them? More than this, does there remain the slightest necessity for repeating to-day that this threatening fate is not in the slightest degree of their seeking? Who asked for this Bill? Who demanded any legislation whatever, but above everything, who demanded revolutionary legislation, subversive and destructive of an ordered and settled condition of society, of centuries old rights, privileges, customs and usages? He would indeed be a very daring person, hoplessly regardless of truth, who would venture to say that the vast bulk of the Syrian Christian community of this State ever indicated or ever hinted, by word or sign or deed, that they wanted this legislation at all. . . . . The first and the only demand, as we have said, was for codification and nothing else. If that demand had been complied with, not a single section of the community would have raised a protest or have found itself in a position to raise any reasonable protest. . . . . The concerned communities protested vehemently, persistently and logically; firstly, because they had not asked for any legislation at all; secondly, because they did not stand in need of new legislation at all; and, thirdly, and chiefly because the legislation they were offered was of the nature of a knock-out blow levelled at their time-honoured and unexceptionable system of inheritance. From all parts of the country, reasoned protests and objections were submitted to the Legislative Council and the Government, both against the manner of the Christian Committee's work and its result and against the principles and provisions of its legislative bantling. In our own columns there have been numerous exposures of the grossly indispensible and subversive character of every principle and provision of the Bill, and there is really no need to recapitulate arguments, criticisms and objections which have been poured out exhaustively. . . . . With the advent of the present Diwan, thousands and thousands of loyal and trusting subjects were suddenly awakened to a realisation of the deplorable fact that a pledge, solemnly given on behalf of the Government, was not to be relied upon We are at a loss to understand what induces the present Diwan to take up the Bill question afresh and pass it in defiance of the violent opposition of the vast majority. We doubt whether any page, more sordid, is to be found in the annals of Travancore legislation. Be this as it may, when the concerned communities awakened rudely to the sudden reappearance of this legislative calamity right in front of them, they did again whatever it was possible for them to do to avert the on-coming incubus, but the Government and the legislature were not disposed te be amenable to reason, and so it comes to pass that this Bill, odious in every clause and line to thousands and thousands of our beloved Maharaja's subjects, is to be finally read and passed at the forthcoming meeting of the Legislative Council, after which it will be hurled, like a destructive thunderbolt, upon an alarmed people, unless, as we hope, some powerful arm will be uplifted, in justice and benevolence, to avert and force back the descending danger. We shall endeavour, in another article, to show how the several thousands who are uncompromisingly and rationally opposed to the measure may still be saved, should the Government and the legislature persist in maintaining that a Bill of this sort needs a place to itself in the statute book of Travancore."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

34. The Andhraprakasika, of the 13th September, has the following note: — ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 13th, 1916.

A new invention.

A New Invention.—The Germans have now invented a new liquid. It does not mutilate the body, nor does it burn it as soon as it comes into contact with the body. But the wonder of it is that death ensues certainly on the fourth day. It also appears that they made a new bomb. It does not explode the moment it falls on the ground. It explodes later on, spreads 30 yards all round, and subjects the surrounding people to torture and death.

35. Referring to the correspondence that passed between America and Japan regarding Japan's demands from China in connection with the Chengchiatung incident, the Andhrapatrika, of the 16th September, says:—If the demands of Japan are really such as have been reported by Reuter, there is no doubt that they humiliate China to some extent. What is humiliation to China is glory to Japan, and America cannot be expected to look upon Japan's glory with unconcern. We fear there may be the thunder of war in the East also. — ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

America and Japan.

36. The Jaridah-i Rozgar, of the 12th September, writes: —All the small States, which have been caught in Germany's snare of deceit and the breath of whose nostrils has been dependent upon Teutonic mercy and generosity, are now stirring themselves like so many creatures with their throats cut. Some of them have lost all patience with her false words and lying promises, while others, because of her selfishness, have given up all hope of obtaining any assistance from her in future. Among the States affected Bulgaria is the one now ready to make peace. — JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras. Sept. 12th, 1916.

Will Bulgaria make peace?

The chief characteristic of German courage is this. Whenever she finds her Ally weak in men and money she abandons him to his fate. On the contrary Great Britain places treaties, agreements and the pledged word before all else and never throws over a friend, however small and insignificant he may be. In fact, Great Britain took up arms solely in the interest of those small States which were about to fall a prey to German rapacity.

37. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 16th September, writes:—Our generous readers are fully aware of the fact, or they have not forgotten that, at the beginning of the war, Germany wanted to spread her deceitful snare in Persia and to use all possible means for the furtherance of her plans. Her spies did not leave a stone unturned there in their endeavour to turn the people of that country against the Allies. — JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

The condition of Persia.

In short, she did her level best but in vain nor did her treacherous acts avail her.

Persia made most praiseworthy endeavours, beyond all expectations to avoid participation in the terrible war.

A short time ago most people were under the impression that Persia also would become a battle field, but she should be grateful to the Allies, especially to Great Britain for having saved her through her far-sighted policy from being involved in this sanguinary struggle and for having safeguarded her from impending disaster. God forbid! if our Government had at that critical juncture kept aloof, God knows, what would have happened by now.

We have very carefully considered the condition of Persia with a view to seeing how she is going to solve the problem of her complicated affairs and how she is going to extricate herself from the maze of those dreadful intrigues. Subsequently telegraphic information has assured us that Persia is quite safe from being caught in Germany's deceitful snare, a fact which has given confidence to us and to Persians especially. Yet Persia requires a sagacious, far-sighted and experienced statesman to save her from the wire-pullings of revolutionaries. It is hoped that the Government of Persia will not be unmindful of this fact which may, with British co-operation, become a fait accompli.

In order to maintain peace and tranquility in Persia a powerful national Government should be established that will be able to give entire satisfaction to the people and be fully capable of defending the country from foreign attacks. This is not all. It should also be able to do away with all internal dissensions and quarrels so that the independence of the country may always be maintained and even-handed justice meted out to the people.

The necessity of establishing a powerful national Government which we have referred to is most keenly felt in Persia. It is not, however, a simple matter which can be disposed of by Persian statesmen alone.

In order that the Government of Persia may succeed in their plans, they should act according to the advice and guidance of the great statesmen of Great Britain without which it will be impossible for them to accomplish this important task. Hence, if Persia acts in consultation with Great Britain and is assisted by that country, it is hoped that a strong and powerful national Government will be set up.

In order to bring about peace and tranquility in the middle-east, it is absolutely necessary that a strong and powerful Government be established in Teheran. For several years past, the British Government have done much to strengthen the system of Government in Persia. Would that that Persians had then realised the value of such excellent endeavours they would not have been confronted with the difficulties they had to face a few days ago, and Persia would have been the centre of peace and tranquility and there would have been no occasion for fear. Now they are beginning opening their eyes a little to the fact that Great Britain is acting entirely in their best interests. Now is the time for the Government of Persia with the help of Britain to establish its rule on such a firm basis that not even the most powerful enemy shall be able to do any harm. Internal dissensions will disappear and we may shortly hear that the kingdom of Persia has, with the aid of the British, made great progress.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The Amir of Afghanistan's loyal policy.

38. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 18th September, writes:—Mention has often been made in these columns of the unshakeable, firm and benevolent policy of the Amir of Afghanistan. Recently His Excellency Lord Chelmsford, in the course of a long speech at the meeting of the Council held on the 5th September, threw some light on foreign affairs with special reference to the friendly relations existing between the Amir of Afghanistan and the Government. Here the editor gives a translation of His Excellency's speech.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The Police in the Madras Presidency.

39. Referring to the statement in the Administration Report of the Police Department for the last year that great difficulty was experienced in recruiting men as constables, the Lokopakari, of the 18th September, observes:—The reasons for the paucity of applicants for the posts of constables are evidently the arduous nature of their duties and the low scale of salary fixed for them. Moreover the constables are not treated sympathetically by their superior officials, they have no holidays and they cannot even get leave easily. That is why educated men do not come forward to enlist as constables. If the lowest salary for this post is raised to at least Rs. 15, young men who fail in the School Final examination may gladly enter this department and this will no doubt make it more efficient. We would also suggest the higher appointments in the department being given to Indians. As they know the habits and customs of the people, they can detect crimes more easily, and they will also treat their subordinates more kindly. The appointment of unsympathetic foreigners leads only to an increase in the expenditure, without any corresponding benefit. We hope these points will be noted by the Government.

SASILEKKA, Madras, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The Police Administration Report.

In its leader on the Madras Police Administration Report for 1915, the Sasileka, of the 15th September, says:— The Government should ascertain the reason why one, who has passed high examinations, declines an offer of Rs. 50 per mensem in the Police department, while he accepts readily an appointment carrying a pay of Rs. 15 in the Revenue department. By the appointment of graduates, the Revenue, the Judicial, the Registration, and such other departments have improved. Those who have passed high examinations should be appointed in the Police department as Sub-Inspectors and Inspectors. The department should be made attractive to them.

(d) Education.

MUHAMMADIYA PRASANGA NESAN, Madras, Sept. 7th, 1916.

Agricultural education in India.

40. The Muhammadiya Prasanga Nesan, of the 7th September *, writes:— It is a known fact that India is mainly an agricultural country and that there are facilities for producing in this country the majority of the products of other countries. Still our agriculturists are growing poorer day by day. The reason for this is not far to seek. Our readers are aware that, in every industry, new reforms are being introduced from time to time. But the Indian agriculturists are still following the old methods, and this is due to their ignorance. Generally the educated among us do not take to agriculture as an avocation and hence the difficulty in persuading the agriculturists to adopt improved methods. It is true that the Government of India is spending a great deal of money with the object of improving agriculture in India and the Agricultural department and the demonstration farms started in different places indicate the interest taken by the Government in this matter. But all the same, there has been no tangible improvement whatever in Indian agriculture. Why is this? An examination of the amounts spent by other countries in improving agriculture will give the answer. The average expenditure incurred by the Government of India on the Agricultural department in 1911–12 was Rs. 15 per 1,000 persons. But the same average was Rs. 690 in England, Rs. 1,380 in Queensland, Rs. 1,290 in Austria, Rs. 540 in America and Rs. 405 in France. England, America and France are purely industrial countries, and in Queensland and Austria the percentage of agriculturists among the population is far less than in India. The above figures clearly show that the amount of money spent by the Government of India on agriculture is not at all sufficient. Even this amount does not seem to be spent in such a manner as to yield the best results. The instruction imparted in the agricultural schools, being in English, is intended only to train people for employment in the Agricultural department and does not help the ordinary agriculturists in any way. They say that modern methods of cultivation are being demonstrated in the farms opened in some important districts. But it is admitted that the Government is working these farms at a loss. Which of the agriculturists will adopt this method, if it will bring about loss? The officers of the Agricultural Department do not at all move freely with the ordinary agriculturists. They think that their business is finished if they meet the rich landholders and sell a few modern appliances to them. What is again the use of keeping the chemical manure recommended by the department in a bottle at an exhibition, with its name labelled in English? It should be used in some plots of land and the profit derived thereby calculated clearly and shown to the agriculturists. It is only then that the people will boldly begin to use it. The managers of many of the demonstration farms now established are not in a position to give definite information regarding the amount of money spent on different plots of land, the yield in those plots and the additional profit derived by applying modern methods and manures. Unless the demonstration farms established by the Government are worked on a profitable basis, the people cannot be expected to follow the methods adopted in these farms. So the only way of improving the condition of the agriculturists of this country is to impart to them agricultural education in the vernaculars and to convince them by demonstration at the Government Farms that the adoption of the modern methods and the use of chemical manures yield a larger profit.

* Received in the current week.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The strike of the students of the Patna College.

41. Referring to this strike, the Lokopakari, of the 18th September, says:—The habit of students of colleges in different places striking work is increasing now. We have to presume that the reason for these strikes is nothing but the unsympathetic way in which the authorities of these colleges treat the students. Professors in colleges should be trained specially in the matter of treating their students. One who has no patience and who does not treat the students as his own children is not fit to be a teacher.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 13th, 1916.

The disobedience of students.

42. In condemning the students' strike in the Law College and the riotous behaviour of students at a meeting in the Presidency College under the auspices of the Madras Presidency College Union Society at which the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar presided, the Andhraprakasika, of the 13th September, remarks:—The Anglo-Indian papers attribute evils such as this on the part of students to the evil advice given to them by ill-disposed leaders of society. This attitude to throw the blame on the Indian politicians is, we fear, likely to bring fresh trouble to society. We, of course, are in full agreement with the Madras Mail that it is un-Aryan to disobey the teacher. It is only after our boys have received western education and learned western religions, that they have begun to disrespect the teacher. What is the remedy? The remedy lies in introducing a course of religious instruction in schools and colleges. The branches of the Hindu University should spread all over India. It is wrong on the part of Anglo-Indian papers to hold the leaders of the people responsible for the faults of students.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Sept. 13th, 1916.

National education.

43. A correspondent to the Desamata, of the 13th September, writing on the subject of national education, remarks:—It is to be regretted that no importance is given in our colleges to Indian history and the vernaculars. It is not conducive to the interests of this country to give Indian students instruction in economy and other sciences suited to the conditions of England. The education available in this country is productive of misery and not happiness. It is, therefore, necessary to revive our indigenous methods of education.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916

A commercial degree.

44. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th September, says that it augurs good for the spread of education that the Calcutta University has arranged for Matriculates taking degrees in commerce after getting through a course of instruction in that branch of knowledge for four years. It says that it will be well if the Madras University also follows this example.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 16th, 1916.

The strike at the Law College.

45. The Kerala Patrika, of the 16th September, condemns the recent strike of the students of the Law College, and observes that the graduates as well as those who just begin to learn the alphabet, ought to respect and be obedient to their teachers.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 17th, 1916.

The Law College students' strike.

While condemning the recent students' strike at the Madras Law College, the Keralodayam, of the 17th September, observes that the action of the Principal Mr. Arthur Davies, who, according to the Mail, is sympathetic towards Indians, was more injudicious than that of the students and far beyond his powers.

46. The Qaumi Report, of the 18th September, referring to the long and meritorious service rendered by Khan Sahib Khaja Khan Sahib, B.A., Assistant Inspector of Schools, says:—When he has rendered such valuable service to Government, why is he being excluded from promotion? His abilities have been admitted by Government and he is held in great esteem by the Muhammadan community. Will not the Government make use of him by appointing him permanently as Muhammadan Inspector the necessity for which appointment is felt to be desirable for the well-being and the advancement of Muhammadan schools.

The Madras Collector's Darbar and the distribution of sanads and titles.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The editor, on behalf of the Muhammadans, says that the community has not been as pleased with the sanad and title being conferred on Khan Sahib as it would have been if he had been granted suitable, deserving and requisite promotion.

(e) Local and Municipal.

47. Referring to that portion of the administration report of the Madras Municipality which dwells upon the high rate of mortality among children in the city, the Swadesamitran, of the 18th September, observes:—One of the reasons for this high rate of mortality is, as Dr. Raghavandra Rao says, the want of pure milk for children. The milkmen in the city always carry the milk in open vessels, which they do not clean properly, and add any kind of water to it. The cows themselves are not healthy and the cowsheds are kept very dirty. It is this milk which is given to some children and some parents make their children fast, not being able to purchase even this milk. As the Corporation is seriously considering about the best means of removing this defect, we will make a suggestion in this matter. It appears that goat's milk, while being equally nutritious is medically better than cow's milk and a goat is really cheaper than a cow, both in price and in the cost of maintenance. But some people may think it derogatory to breed goats and some again may feel shy to use this milk in their houses. What the Municipal authorities should do is to remove this impression from the people, by means of lectures on the qualities of goat's milk and to set an example to the ordinary people by using goat's milk themselves. We feel sure that, if this is done, the rate of mortality among children will go down.

Death-rate among children in Madras

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

48. In commenting upon the Administration Report of the Madras Corporation for 1915–16, the Lokopakari, of the 18th September, observes:—We are sure that the high death-rate in the city will decrease if the Corporation creates facilities for the supply of pure water and the sale of unadulterated foodstuffs. Though the rate of mortality in Madras was less in 1915 than in 1894, it is far more than the rate in Bombay, Calcutta and Rangoon. This shows that Madras is not as sanitary as these three cities. The condition of drainage in Madras is really very bad. If drainage water is always overflowing in the streets, how can the sanitation of the city improve? There are not sufficient facilities for removing filth. The habitations of the Panchamas have to be improved. Helpless poor people have no place to stop in. It is these that spread the contagion of epidemic diseases. It is stated that the birth-rate in the city has been steadily going down since 1912, and this is attributed to the poverty of the people. The best way of remedying this is for the Government to provide facilities for improving the education, industries and trade of the people. We are glad that the work of Dr. Raghavendra Rao as Health officer has been noted with appreciation in the report. This is another proof of the fact that an Indian can successfully discharge the duties of any high post, if he is given an opportunity to do so. The appointment of Indians like Dr. Raghavendra Rao has also another advantage of saving money to the Corporation. The sanitation of the city was being looked after by two European officials of the Corporation, at a cost of nearly Rs. 2,500 per mensem. The duties discharged by both these officials are now being done by Dr. Raghavendra Rao quite efficiently and he costs the Corporation only Rs. 750 per mensem. This shows clearly that the statement of the Europeans that Indians cannot hold any high appointment is due only to jealousy.

Sanitation of Madras.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Elections of members of Local bodies.

49. The Kerala Patrika, of the 16th September, condemns the present system of election of members to Local bodies, according to which all persons who pay a certain amount by way of taxes have the privilege of voting, and observes that, if, these bodies should be of any use to the people, it should enable discerning courageous and self-respecting people to enter them and that a mere increase in the elected members thereon can produce no material results.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The Madras Corporation.

50. In the course of its comments on the meeting of the Corporation to consider the Administration Report of the President, the Andhrapatrika, of the 18th September, says:—At the commencement of the meeting there were 25 members, but when it dispersed there were only 11. The President had to compel one or two members to remain in order to maintain the quorum. The members were not patient enough to sit till the termination of the meeting. We hope they will once review their conduct in this matter. . . . . The Commissioners wished that model houses might be constructed for the poor Muhammadans. We recommend the construction of such houses for the poor among the Hindus and the Christians also. It is not proper on the part of the Commissioners to rest satisfied with affording facilities for Eurasians only.

(h) Railways.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Indian railways.

51. In recommending that the Government may take the Indian railways under their management from the companies, the Andhrapatrika, of the 16th September, says:—The reason given by the Sub-Committee of the Planters' Association, in Darjeeling, deserves special attention. If the Government takes the management of railways, the profits derived therefrom will be utilised for developing the Indian railways. There will then be scope for a reduction of rates on goods. The Government will note that there is not the slightest difference between the contention of the Darjeeling planters and that of the whole body of the Indians. We trust that ere long the Indian railways will come under the management of the Government and conduce to the advancement of the country.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 16th, 1916.

The disadvantages of railways.

52. The Kistnapatrika, of the 16th September, contains an imaginary dialogue between a preceptor and a disciple in which is the following:—

Preceptor.—When there were no railways, our countrymen were enjoying all passenger fares and other conveyance charges. In the Telugu country there are now two thousand miles of rail road. Country roads have been constructed as a means to take goods to the railways. All this might have cost 30 crores of rupees. If our countrymen had laid out the capital it would profit India. But the greater part of the money had been contributed by the rich men in England, and the interest is enjoyed by them. In twenty-five years after a railway is opened, it repays the money invested therein along with the interest. But as the trains belong to the rich English merchants, all the money in India goes to them. A crore and forty lakhs of rupees are annually sent to England as net profits from the railways in the Telugu country. If this money is invested in industries, we will not be losers. But that is not done. This large sum under fares and freights goes from this country every year even after the capital outlay and the interest has been paid up. It may be said that each man is paying a poll-tax of 1 rupee.

Disciple.—But we are enabled to travel by rail without fear.

Preceptor.—The prices are everywhere the same. The man who had a harvest and he who had none do not possess any stock of grain at the end of the year. They sell their grain for hundies, promissory notes, and rupees which when melted are not worth even 10 annas each. These will not protect the agriculturist in troublous times. If a war takes place in the north-western frontier and the trains are all engaged in conveying troops, our artificial economic situation will be laid bare. Money in the ryots' hands will be of no avail. Famine will overtake the country. Although we can travel safely by rail, yet it is only partially true that the railways have been opened to improve our economic situation. Nine parts out of ten they have been opened for the protection of the Government and for the export of agricultural products and the import of foreign goods. If our economic situation is to improve, we should have a net work of channels all over India connecting all the rivers. Exports and imports should be carried on by their means. Agriculture will then improve, and freights on goods will be enjoyed by our countrymen. The railways import foreign articles which are cheaper than the articles made locally, and have thus been a chief means by which our handicrafts have been destroyed.

(k) General.

The Viceroy's speech in the Legislative Council.

53. In commenting upon this speech, the Vaisyamitran, of the 11th September, takes exception to that portion of it in which he advocated the nomination of a representative for the Indian troops in the Legislative Council, and observes:—The people will not derive any benefit by a Military man being nominated to the Legislative Council as a reward for the valour exhibited by the Indian troops in this war; for Military men cannot understand the details of the executive administration. Moreover when the Commander-in-Chief is already a member of the Viceroy's Executive Council, guarding the interests of the army, what is a subordinate of his to do in the Legislative Council? The statement of Lord Chelmsford that the number of nominated members in the Legislative Councils should be increased, when the cry throughout the country is that these Councils should be fully representative, is not very encouraging.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotta, Sept. 11th, 1916.

The Viceroy's speech at the Imperial Legislative Council.

In expressing disappointment at His Excellency the Viceroy's speech at the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Yogakshemam, of the 15th September, points out that as His Excellency succeeds a great Viceroy, he cannot expect to command the respect of the people, unless he shows extraordinary administrative skill, and that, if the speech in question is to be regarded as a preface to his administration, they cannot expect much from him.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The Viceroy's speech.

In commenting upon the speech of His Excellency the Viceroy at the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, which touches upon several important matters, the Kerala Patrika, of the 16th September, points out that it is somewhat disappointing, endorses His Excellency's remarks on the subject of the indentured labour system, and dwells upon the necessity of explaining to the labourers the difficulties and hardships which they will meet with in the Colonies before they agree to proceed thereto.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Keralodayam, of the 17th September, expresses disappointment at His Excellency's speech, which however is more like an administration report than anything else inasmuch as it did not touch upon any of the burning questions of the day such as the attitude of the local Government towards certain newspapers, the position of India in the Empire, and the final dicision to publish the report of the Public Services Commission. It demurs to the view that His Excellency's powers of nomination to the Legislative Council should be enlarged, thinks that His Excellency's utterances on the question of indentured labour will only tend to increase the agitation among the people, and concludes:—On a close perusal of His Excellency's speech it did not strike us that our new Viceroy is, like Lord

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 17th, 1916.

Hardinge, a broadminded, capable, courageous and far seeing statesman, who heartily loves the Indians. We only pray to the Almighty God that His Excellency may be induced to work incessantly for the advancement of India without being entrapped by the Anglo-Indians.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 15th, 1916.

His Excellency the Viceroy's first speech.

Referring to the speech of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford delivered at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council held on the 5th September, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 15th September, remarks:—This is the first speech that His Excellency has made since he assumed charge of his august office some six months back as Viceroy of India. It is very disappointing, however, to see that the speech, which, really speaking, is only a resumé of past events, gives us no clue whatever as regards the line of policy His Excellency intends to adopt in the future. His Excellency has not given any direct or definite expression to his views as regards the many intricate problems of the day concerning which the Indian public is very keenly interested at present. It will certainly not be pleasing to the people to be told that His Excellency is considering the question of increasing the number of nominated members to his council, while the public is actually agitating for an increase in the number of seats now allotted to the elected representatives of the country. . . . . Rather than honour the Indian army by nominating a representative from among that class to his council, His Excellency could well have shown his appreciation of its valour and loyalty to the empire by placing the members of the Indian army on a footing of equality with their English brethren. . . . . His Excellency gave expression to a desire on the part of his Government to entrust the work of construction and repairs of public buildings, etc., hitherto done through the Public Works Department, to private agency hereafter. In these days when our people are very much suffering for want of proper walks of life, it is certain that this innovation will be thankfully hailed by them.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The present Secretary of State for India.

54. The Prapanchmitran, of the 15th Septeptember, says:—The present Secretary of State for India does not know anything about India. When he was questioned in Parliament whether he was aware of the dissatisfaction caused to the Indian public by security having been demanded from New India, he said that he knew nothing about it. When he was asked again recently whether he was aware of a shop having been opened in Bombay, against the will of the public, for vending foreign liquors, he replied in the negative. It is curious indeed that one who does not take any interest in knowing anything of Indian affairs should be styled the Secretary of State for India. Why cannot the English Government confer this appointment on one who sympathises with the Indians and takes an interest in their affairs?

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

Mr. Davies and the students of the Law College.

55. The Hindu Nesan, of the 18th September, writes:—Though we do not approve of the students of the Law College having struck merely because Mr. Davies increased the number of working hours, we do not think that the Principal was well advised in refusing to cancel his orders when the students complained that they were hard. We do not see the necessity for his treating the students of this college as school-boys. The notice now put up by him is even more cruel. He has stated that those who sent in a written apology for their mistake and disloyalty in having struck on the 11th instant, would lose ten days' attendance, that those who sent such an apology before the 12th idem would lose 25 days' attendance and that those who did not submit such an apology would be dismissed. Apart from the vindictive nature of the notice and the serious loss resulting to the students in their attendance, we take strong exception to the use of the word disloyalty in the notice, while referring to the conduct of the students. How can the decision of the students not to attend the college make them guilty of disloyalty?

We thought that, after the beginning of this war, the term disloyalty had no place in India. But the notice of Mr. Davies shows that it exists still, at least in the opinion of Mr. Davies. We would repeat that he should not have used this word at all. Coming to the penalty portion of the notice, we doubt whether Mr. Davies has the power to cut off attendance for a number of days at his will. If this notice is enforced, we dare say that the students will be injured materially. Some of them may find it difficult to make up the required attendance to appear for the examination. We hope the College Council will interfere and see that the prospects of the students are not affected by the mandate of the Principal.

The Lakopakari, of the 18th September, echoes the same view regarding the penalty imposed on the students, and says that if the Principal had been content with taking an apology from the students, it would have helped to restore amity of feeling between him and the students.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

56. Adverting to the enormous expenditure incurred by the Nattukottai Chettis in welcoming His Excellency during this tour, the Lokopakari, of the 18th September, thinks that the amount spent in this direction can well be utilised for feeding the poor and opening schools, and says that the Governor will be doing a good thing if he can prevent wasteful expenditure of this kind and divert it to useful purposes.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

Lord Pentland's tour to the Chetti land.

57. The Vidyabhanu, of the 18th September, condemns the action of the students of the Presidency College who are stated to have misbehaved at a meeting at which Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar presided by hooting him out, and observes with regret that such individual follies only cast a slur upon the reputation which the students of this Presidency have gained from a long time for their regularity and obedience.

VIDYABHANU, Konajet, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The Madras students and Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar.

58. The Swadesamitran, of the 19th September, refers to a second meeting of the planters of Ceylon to consider the best means of improving the condition of the coolies working in the plantations and observes:—Though we welcome the decision of the planters to do away with the system of giving advances to coolies, which are a permanent burden upon them and of allowing kanganees to exercise absolute sway over the coolies, we regret to note that no mention whatever was made at the meeting of the other recommendations made by the committee appointed by the Ceylon Government to enquire into the condition of these coolies. The number of hours a man can be made to work should be determined and the question of exacting work from pregnant women and those who have just delivered should also be considered. Steps should be taken to enable the cooly to live like a free man, getting adequate wages and enjoying all facilities which are essential to make life happy. The extent of land cultivated by Indian coolies was 650,000 acres in 1914, and at one cooly for each acre there should have been as many coolies in that year. When so many coolies were taken away to Ceylon, there is no wonder that there was a scarcity of labourers in India. At the same time, the planters cannot hope to get such a large number of coolies from any other country than India, and that is why they are prepared to introduce some reforms to improve the condition of these coolies. Our Government should not be satisfied with the half-hearted reforms proposed by the planters but should insist on all the grievances of the Indians being redressed. We hope that Mr. Todhunter, who has been placed on special duty to enquire into the condition of the coolies will make a thorough enquiry. As he is a European, the coolies may be afraid of approaching him and expressing their grievances. It is, therefore, the duty of leading Indians in Ceylon to make arrangements for Mr. Todhunter having genuine information from the coolies direct. This is the best opportunity for the coolies to get rid of their hardships, and we hope it will be availed of to the fullest extent.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 19th, 1916.

The Indian coolies in Ceylon.

59. The Hindu Nesan, of the 19th September, welcomes the appointment of Mr. Gillman as Member of Council in the place of Sir Harold Stuart, and observing that the supersession of the claims of some seniors in this case proves clearly that the Government wanted to get the best man for the place, expresses the hope that the question of seniority will be similarly shelved in choosing a successor to the Hon'ble Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar and the appointment conferred on Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achariyar.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 14th, 1916.

The Empire.

60. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th September, reports New India to have written thus:—If in the future reconstruction of the Empire India is left to remain a dependency, the Indians will surely become a discontented people. It is a historical fact that India is a dependency to Great Britain. India looks upon the English Sovereign and the British Parliament as her rulers. She has no such regard to the empire. She deems herself a part and not a dependency of the empire. So in the reconstitution of the empire she wishes to be made a partner and not a mean dependent. Those who will be responsible for the reconstruction should not forget this. If India has the power she will at once introduce a system of protective tariff within her own limits as the Colonies have done, and after safeguarding her own commercial interests, look to those of the rest of the empire. The writer of this article has spoken on this matter to Sir William Meyer and his predecessors in his office. They are not under any delusion about this.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 14th, 1916.

The Agricultural Conference at Pusa.

61. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th September, comments on the report of the Agricultural Conference held at Pusa and says:—The Sub-Committee of the Conference has made the valuable suggestion that a herd of the best cattle taken from the different stocks should be maintained for breeding purposes to help the agriculturists. But it must take a long time to carry out this suggestion. The conference has failed to take steps to preserve in the meanwhile the Karachi and the Ongole breeds which are already deteriorating from further deterioration. It might have considered the question of imposing a high duty as a temporary measure on the exports of cattle belonging to these breeds. Had the conference contained Indian representatives acquainted with local conditions, some such temporary arrangement would have been made.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 15th September, says that the Pusa Agricultural Conference have proposed very costly arrangements for the maintenance of cattle for breeding purposes, and doubts what the result may be of such a grand beginning.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Mr. Warburton's lecture.

62. The Andhrapatrika, of the 16th September, says:—It is highly gratifying that in his lecture in the Young Men's Christian Association Auditorium, Mr. Warburton, a Canadian, expressed the hope that the Canadians might have their part with the Indians in making the empire what it should be, and in developing within the empire all those qualities which would go to make up a nation. It is the self-governing dominions that are in a position to assert emphatically the principle that the strength of the whole depends on the strength of each part. It augurs good for us as well as the empire that a citizen of one of such dominions should extend that principle to us also.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Sept. 13th, 1916.

Lord Chelmsford.

63. In the course of its comments on His Excellency Lord Chelmsford's opening speech at the first meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Desamata, of the 13th September, says:—If the Government had advanced the commercial interests of India, knowing that it would profit themselves as well as the Indians, Japan could never have flooded the Indian markets with her goods. The East India Company adopted a shortsighted policy and mindful of their own interests, crushed the Indian industries. Their indifference and neglect has now seriously affected both the Government and the people. In spite of the fact that India occupies a very important position in the commerce of the empire, she was not given any representation in the Paris Conference. The indifference of the British rulers in such matters cannot but be characterised as improper and unjust. Japan which rose to commercial eminence only lately is now "robbing" India of its wealth by promoting her Indian trade.

The British rulers have, therefore, to be on their guard and begin to take active interest in developing Indian industries and commerce.

The proceedings of the recent meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council was not, on the whole, satisfactory. His Excellency the Viceroy merely referred to several items of administration and did not enter into details. He left several questions agitating the public at present untouched. We hope that he will make up these omissions by practical work on his part and render his rule popular and memorable.

Lady Chelmsford.

64. The Manorama, of the 15th September, congratulates Lady Chelmsford on her being able to deliver a speech in Urdu.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur K. Suryanarayanamurti Garu.

65. The Andhraprakasika, of the 16th September, says that by nominating Rao Bahadur Kommireddi Suryanarayanamurti Garu of Cocanada as a member of the Madras Legislative Council, the Government have honoured not only the public of Cocanada but also the class of Telagas, of which he is a member, and all the businessmen of this Presidency. It remarks that the efforts of the Government to advance the interests of the Telagas are praiseworthy.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Untouchables.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th September, takes the following from the Modern Review :—Non-Brahmans may say many things about the custom of the Brahmins to desist from touching certain classes of people. Does not this custom prevail among the western nations? Do they not show the attitude of mind involved in the custom towards every Indian, whether he is a Hindu (Brahman or non-Brahman) or a Muhammadan? Why do the Europeans refuse to travel in railway compartments in which Indians are seated? Why should they be provided with separate compartments? Why are not the Indians allowed to build houses in certain places, and walk along certain paths in India? Why is not even a high-born Indian permitted to eat in an Anglo-Indian club? Why are Indians unfit to hold high offices in India, or to go to the British Colonies and the United States of America? Why has it been made difficult for the Indians to obtain passports to go to the above places? Why do the Educational authorities in Great Britain treat the Indian students with contempt? May the wise think if there is any other way of escaping from these indignities than the attainment of self-government! Let us suppose that the injunction not to touch certain classes is attributable to the unwisdom of the ancients. Does it indicate divine wisdom on the part of Europeans and Americans to treat countries after countries and continents after continents as untouchable? A bureaucratic system of Government may raise, to some extent, the status of the lower classes of people. But it is only by means of self-government that the Indian nation as a whole can rise to eminence and be placed on an equal footing with the other nations of the world.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 18th, 1916.

The Volunteer Guard.

67. The Andhraprakasika, of the 16th September, has the following note :—The Volunteer Guard; 92 men belonging to this went to Basra the day before yesterday by the Bombay train. They will there do the work of motor launch drivers.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Indians and the Military Service.

68. The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th September, says :—Truth extracts certain passages from an article contributed by the Lord Bishop of Madras, and strongly recommends the enlistment of the Indians in the Volunteer Corps, and their appointment to military offices. Indeed, that paper, which is in full agreement with the Bishop of Madras and advocates the cause of the Indians, deserves its name. It is papers like this that mirror forth the heart of the British and do real service to the Empire. The Manchester Guardian and the New Statesman also referred to the question of the admission of the Indians into the military service with the same sympathy. Some of the English papers having thus taken up the cause of the Indians, we can believe that the angle of vision of the authorities will also change. The question above referred to will be satisfactorily solved if Lord Chelmsford will follow the example set by Lord Carmichael. The authorities here in India can no longer exercise any influence over the English people in England whose liberty is their heaven.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916.

The Imperial Legislative Council.

69. In commenting on the questions and answers in the recent meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 20th September, says:—The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma did well by his questions and the answers he received thereto to expose the fact that the Government are not contemplating any changes in the Executive and Legislative Councils to be introduced after the war. This confirms our belief that unless we work hard for it, self-government will never come within the range of practical politics. Our ideals must be ringing in the ears of the authorities when the Congress next meets, and the voice of thirty-three crores of the Indian population should, on the day of the meeting of the Congress, bring these ideals home to the minds of the rulers.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916.

The Press Association.

70. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th September, remarks that among those appointed to wait in deputation on Lord Chelmsford in connection with the Press Act, there is none representing any vernacular paper. Vernacular papers form the majority of the newspapers in India; and it is they that suffer most heavily under the Act. This omission, says the paper, must be due to an undue fascination for English papers or for the English language.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The Indian army.

71. In an article under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 22nd September, writes:—Armies are of two kinds: Armies for the maintenance of internal peace, and armies for service outside the country. There are, besides, naval troops. No country which is without these two kinds of troops and no country which has a coast line but has no navy, can claim to have independence. This is exactly the condition in which India finds herself at present. The British Government are just beginning to think that Indians should be admitted to the army as territorials, and given military training so as to help the defence of the empire. This policy is equally beneficial to England and India. The British casualties amount to 40 per cent of those available for service. If the identity of interests now realised between England and India had been discovered some two or three years earlier, the result would have been productive of far greater good. India would have been in a position to supply 40 to 50 millions of troops. If Germany were to see that England had such a huge army ready for service, she would never have dared to enter the war. Europe would then have escaped this gigantic loss of men and money. The western nations could not then be said to grow wise only "after the event". It is their want of foresight that brought them to this pass No nation should cease to dread the effect of its misdeeds. The British could very well have succeeded in preserving this dread among nations. It is their failure to do this that brought Europe to this deplorable condition. If the British should now at least be liberal and fearless in admitting Indians to the army and navy, they would be greatly adding to the permanence of their empire.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 15th, 1916.

Weights and measures.

72. Referring to the absence of uniformity in the weights and measures used in this country, the Manorama, of the 15th September, points out that in the existing circumstances it is not surprising that the last year's report of the department, which is entrusted with the duty of verifying weights and measures, is not satisfactory, and hopes that the Government will soon give effect to the recommendations of the "Weights and Measures" Committee.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Sept. 15th, 1916.

Indians on the directorate of the Madras Bank.

73. A propos of the longstanding grievance of the Madrasis, namely, that there is none of them on the directorate of the Madras Bank, the Yogakshamam, of the 15th September, regrets that the Bank in which there is a large amount of Indian money, should not have even a single Indian thereon, and points out that it is matters like this which make the people lose their confidence in it, and that it is the duty of the Government to nip in the bud this want of confidence on their part.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 17th, 1916.

The Punjab Government and the District Boards Bill.

74. The Keralodayam, of the 17th September, draws attention to the action of the Punjab Government in withdrawing the District Boards Bill, because it was vehemently opposed by the Indian representatives, and hopes that other Governments will follow in their footsteps.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Sept. 16th, 1916.

Indian labour.

75. In its English leader the Lokuprakasam, of the 16th September, dwells upon the tricks played by the recruiting agents to induce Indian coolies to proceed to the Colonies, and expresses satisfaction that the matter is receiving the attention of the Government.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 13th, 1916.

The decline of our nationality.

76. The Qaumi Report, of the 13th September, writes:—There are in Egypt, Syria, Damascus and Beyrout hundreds of thousands of Christians whose mother-tongue is Arabic. Similarly in Turkey there are thousands of Christians and Jews who speak Turkish, dress very much like the Turks themselves. If all of us, Mussalmans, desire to call ourselves a nation, we should at least adopt the same language. In this regard all the Mussalmans of northern India may be called one nation, for, in addition to Punjabi, Gujarati, and Bengali, they speak and write Urdu, the lingua franca of India.

But such is not the case with the Madras Presidency. From Madras to Colombo, Mussalmans know only Tamil. At Bezwada, Waltair and Raichur they speak Telugu, whose home is in the Dakhan districts Maharathi, in South Canara Malayalam and in the Mysore districts Kanarese only.

To-day all Islamic literary treasures are to be found in Urdu; hence our Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, Maharathi and Kanarese-speaking brethren derive no benefit from this store.

The feelings of clan patriotism cannot be created in a nation without the aid of the press. Newspapers are the means of rousing national enthusiasm. It is obvious that only those Mussalmans are benefited thereby who speak and understand Urdu. In the districts of the Madras Presidency no one knows who the famous poets Firdawsī, Sa'dī, Nizāmī and Jami are. Our Tamil Mussalmans are not acquainted with Hafiz, Amir Khusran, Sāib or Lahbai.

The city of Madras is famous for its intense religious enthusiasm, but how can the hundreds of thousands of people who speak different languages derive any benefit from this religious enthusiasm? From every side complaints are being made regarding religious education. But the question is what means do the abovementioned vernaculars (Tamil, Telugu, etc.) afford for advancing our religious education? Mussalmans who study in district schools and colleges take along with English, Tamil, Telugu and Malayalam, etc., as their vernacular languages and with these Islam has no connexion whatever.

This is the strange part of it. Although all of us, Mussalmans, are the subjects of one empire and live in the same country, yet we are strangers and aliens to one another and are unable to converse together. As has been pointed out by Professor Monteith in his lecture, because of these differences we have lost all sense of decency and self-respect. The hold of Islam upon our hearts and minds has been weakened. The result of this decline today is that we are giving no thought as to how feelings of union and concord may be created among our Mussalman brethren. We simply sing of patriotism and love of country, but do not take into consideration the secret of the authority of Islam being always submissive to it. On the other hand, they think that the age of "Home Rule" is coming in, and we shall profit by being friendly with the Hindus. The reason of this negligence and decline is that most of us are singing the song "We are Indians first and Mussalmans next."

Great God! We first lost temporal power and now the spiritual authority of Islam is gone! We have forgotten that we did not bring empire with us. We came to India to deliver God's message to the people. Fortunately and by the will of God power also came into our hands incidentally, but in the fulness of time it was wrested from us. We gave it up with the very hands with which we had received it. But can you ever forget the fact of our bringing Islam with us? This power can never be taken away from us and we are responsible for that.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Sept. 11th, 1916.

77. The Qaumi Report, of the 11th September, writes:—Islamic teaching was that God's creatures are all equal under the banner of Muhammad. The matter of wealth and poverty is a great thing, but here they are not even differentiated by their black or white colour. Under Islamic rule all enjoy equal rights and the divine law applies equally to all those who come under Muhammadan banner. Equal rights now exist even in Turkistan, Afghanistan, Persia, the Balkans and Africa. The Abyssinians, when they professed Islam, gave up all their barbarous customs and habits, the Chinese gave up their notions, the Persians their beliefs and the Tartars and the Berbers changed their fashions.

The decline of our nationality.

The secret of believing in one God, one religion and one nation was manifested to all the people whose hearts and minds bore the Islamic impress.

Every Mussalman knows that we are the followers of Traditions. Has any one ever thought of penetrating its secret? The thing is that whoever has professed Islam should not be allowed to act in accordance with the customs and habits of his community, he should act on Traditions. The order in Tradition is so very imperative that the Holy Prophet has proclaimed, "Whoever denies any Traditions is not my follower."

This Tradition alone sufficed to keep fresh the fervour of our sense of self-respect and honour among our elders and Islam has a hold on our dress and manners, but when we glance at our condition in India we are conscious of feeling pain.

Although the Muhammadans of the different sections of the same community adhere to the same form of worship, believe in one God, in one and the same Prophet and in the Korān, yet they differ very much in their manners, customs and ceremonies. But the spirit of nationality has been shattered to pieces and divided, and the fact is that no part of it contains the life of Islamic enthusiasm.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Sept. 12th, 1916.

The Qaumi Report, of the 12th September in continuation of the article on the subject of "the Decline of our Nationality" in its previous issue, writes:—For example, consider the result of propagation of Islam. Hindus, who embraced Islam in the time of our ancestors, are not acquainted with any language common to all Mussalmans. They simply know their own tongue. On happy and mournful occasions they observe their national manners and customs. Their dress even is exactly like that of Hindus. This being the case, where is nationality and how can we call ourselves the faithful to God and the Apostle.

The Maimon community embraced Islam centuries ago, but it still acts in accordance with the principles of Hindu law in matters of inheritance and division of property. The Mappillas were the first converts to Islam in India, but they marry their nieces according to Hindu custom. The Lubbais and Kailans are averse to changing their dress or language, while in commercial matters they imitate Hindu manners and customs. In villages the people of those communities wear tufts of hair on their heads, allow females to wear saries and to go out without a veil and to plaster their houses with cow-dung.

Because of these differences the potency of our nationality has been destroyed and the non-Islamic habits exist among us, according to the saying of the great poet "Hali:"

"From being camel drivers we rose to the position of the rulers of the land;

"Hence the habits of camel-driver still exist in us."

I do not mean that the distinction in dress and language is objectionable: I am bringing such matters to light as are destructive to our nationality. I have heard of this objection that when Afghans, Turks, Persians, Arabs and Chinese differ in dress and languages, why do we not call them into question for having destroyed nationality. I submit that this question is not sound. But consider that the countries of Turks, Afghans, Persians and Chinese are separate and their Governments are separate. It does not rest with them alone. Mussalmans in Russia, Bulgaria, Greece, England, France and Germany also speak different languages and wear their respective dress, but it is not harmful to them, for their countries differ.

Our condition is not so in India. It is neither our country, nor our Government exists therein. How can we allow this difference to continue? If we cannot have uniformity in dress we should at least have in language. Nationality cannot be created without a language for its basis. The people whom we regard as the English do not belong to the same tribe; their languages also differ to a certain extent. They are called a nation for they all speak and understand one language, English.

A lesson in national self-respect.

78. The Qaumi Report, of the 14th September, writes:—I have been writing that the fundamental principle of nationality is language. In India there should be one national language for all the Mussalmans. So long as we are not prepared to subordinate our desires, manners and customs and habits to national self-respect, we can never obtain this boon.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Sept. 14th, 1916.

There are many Mussalmans who are unacquainted with Urdu and have no use for it. But these people can never overcome the effect of the revolutionising power of time. But signs are of an awakening, and it will soon be incumbent on every one or every Mussalman to strictly obey the mandate of his nationality.

The editor, referring to the telegraphic information received this day regarding the speech made by Lady Chelmsford in Urdu to Indian ladies at the Purdah Club and the appreciation and astonishment expressed by Raja and Rani Hernam Singh, says:—It is not a matter of astonishment; for, when a real desire is created in the mind, it is not suppressed by any excuse, obstacle or difficulty. Desire is a strength of the soul and it fully produces its effect.

It is amazing that most Mussalmans do not know the Urdu language. The coursing of blood along their veins has been slackened by a knowledge of English and the vernacular languages. The strength of the soul is being sapped by the influence of habits and customs.

III.—Legislation.

The Indian Press Act.

79. The Hitakarini, of the 3rd September (received on the 19th September) says:—The trouble to which New India was brought is to be attributed to the existence of the Press Act in the Indian Statute Book. We trust that His Excellency Lord Chelmsford will repeal the Act, help the cause of papers like New India, which are devoted to the welfare of the country and win everlasting glory.

Hitakarini, Ellore, Sept. 3rd, 1916.

The Indian Press Act.

Referring to the public meeting held in Bombay under the presidency of the editor of the Bombay Chronicle in order to urge the repeal of the Press Act, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 22nd September, in the course of a leading article on the importance of a free press, observes:—In the United Kingdom the leading statesmen are all alive to the advantages accruing from an unrestrained press as an effective check on the vagaries of the officials. They are, therefore, scrupulous in upholding its liberty. In spite of the check afforded by the press, there are officers of Government who sometimes use their power for their own private ends, thinking nothing of the effect of their deeds which may convulse the whole world. Even in these critical times, there is nothing to restrain the freedom of the press in England and yet she is not free from disquiet. Would any justminded citizen for that reason urge a more rigorous press law to meet the situation? The result of gagging the press can never be salutary. Even an Emperor should be afraid of disregarding public opinion. While even schoolmasters are not allowed to use the rod in these days, it is surprising that administrators should seek to justify the use of so deadly a weapon as the Press Act. It is erroneous to hold that the measure would be necessary at least during the continuance of the war. In a crisis like the present, restraint on the freedom of speech is productive of even greater harm than in normal times. Those who are liberal and just have nothing to fear from intriguers and anarchists and the masses cannot be blind to the dangers arising from the existence of such promoters of evil in their midst, and would, in their own interests, help to bring them to book. When we find that some irresponsible officers of Government are unable to realise this fact and insist that the press measure should remain on the statute book, it is easy to see to what low level their qualities of discretion and prudence have sunk. Poison can never be converted into an elixir of life. The history of the world and all ancient lore is teeming with instances which prove what dreadful revolutions have been wrought by the denial of the freedom of speech. If there be any who would still be so shortsighted as to think that such gagging would be to their interest, the on-lookers can only exclaim, "Their deeds on their heads!"

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Sept. 15th, 1916.

The Hindu Limited Owners' Bill.

80. In expressing its approval of the Madras Hindu Limited Owners' Bill, the Yogakshemam, of the 15th September, points out that, if its application be extended to the Marumakkatatyam and Makkatayam Karànavans of Malabar, who in several cases mismanage their tarwads and thereby cause much unnecessary litigation, there, will no longer be any necessity for Mr. Rama Menon's Bill, and draws the attention of the Malabar representatives on the Legislative Council to the matter.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Sept. 17th, 1916.

Corruption in the Mysore Public Service.

81. The Mysore Star, of the 17th September, writes:—It is an open secret now that corruption is steadily on the increase in the public service of our country. However noble the Government and its higher officials may be, dishonesty and irregularities in the lower ranks frustrate the many liberal schemes devised by Government for the good of the country and the people, instead of enjoying peace and happiness, suffer from various wrongs. The people at large have little or no knowledge of the laws of their country or of their rights thereon and coming as they do into contact only with the lower officials, with whom taking bribes is a privilige sanctified by time and custom, there is no end to the wholesale plundering that is openly going on in every nook and corner of the country. It would take volumes to write in detail about the iniquities committed on the ignorant public by this class of minor officials, and it may fearlessly be said that no department is free from this evil. Of course, it must be conceded that here and there we do find an official who is God fearing, virtuous and loyal. To such men all honour is due, but then they are so few and far between. There can be no two opinions as regards the urgent need there is of putting down corruption and freeing the people from their miseries. But the question is what steps are the authorities taking in this direction. It is so difficult to prove cases of corruption and, besides, people are afraid of the law which looks upon either of the parties to the offence as guilty. Owing to the ignorance of law on the part of the public and want of unity among them corruption prevails unhampered and on a large scale. The spread of education may lessen this evil to a certain extent, but it is hardly proper for Government to remain indifferent towards it in the belief that their servants are honest. Our kings in ancient days used to wander in disguise to personally see the real condition of their subjects, and even today there are not wanting a few devoted public servants who follow this wholesome custom. The only remedy that suggests itself to us is that Government should set up a new department on the lines of the Criminal Investigation Department for detecting cases of corruption and amply reward officials of that department whenever they successfully bring such cases to justice, and also inflict dire punishment upon persons proved guilty of corruption. This may go a long way to mitigate the evil. It is not the inadequacy of the salaries of the minor officials, as some believe, that is really at the root of this evil. There is no end to human greed, and once a man becomes addicted to corruption no amount of increase to his salary will really satisfy him and prevent him from going wrong.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. The Hindu, of the 20th September, has the following:—"We have once before alluded to the lack of any indications of the adoption of a new 'angle of vision' on the part of the Colonies towards things Indian. A concrete instance is furnished in a flagrantly scandalous case of official oppression in that—for Indians—dread of sorrows, South Africa. Keshav Purbhoo, the son of a duly registered Indian resident of Transvaal, a minor aged 14 years, wished to join his father from India. To this end the necessary certificates were procured from the authorities in India. He arrived at Delagoa Bay and applied for permission to enter the Transvaal. He waited some weeks without reply, entered the Transvaal with his father and was arrested and charged with non-production of registration certificate. The magistrate was, however, satisfied of his bonâ fides and acquitted him. Father and son proceeded on their way home, but they under-estimated the zeal of the immigration authorities for the equitable administration of the immigration laws. The son was re-arrested and again charged with exactly the same offence of which he had before been acquitted, the non-production of a registration certificate. The magistrate in question was more accommodating and the persistence of the authorities had its reward, for he disbelieved the certificates from India and ordered the boy's deportation. The Supreme Court was thereon moved in behalf of the boy and granted an interdict and costs against the Government, referring the matter back to the magistrate for a more thorough enquiry. This had the desired effect for the same magistrate now found the boy not guilty. The Immigration authorities, however, were not to be baffled. The boy was served with a prohibition notice under the Immigration Regulation Act of 1913, was re-arrested and refused bail. He is still in jail while an appeal to the board is pending. . . . . Such are the bare facts of a case which throws a flood of light on the activities of the immigration authorities and their sense of justice, which might put even a German court-martial to the blush."

II.—Home Administration.

2. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator, of the 21st September:—"A correspondent writes to us calling attention to the large number of waifs and strays in Calicut. These pitiable mites grow on uncared for amidst unhealthy and immoral surroundings loading ultimately to the jail. It was only the other day one of these unfortunates was lying dead in a shop verandah for hours together. State is the guardian of such castaways, and how is this duty discharged by its officers? The less said the better.

"Born and let loose in the street they drift on to crime and constitute a danger to society. There is no provision in the Police Act of this country made for the protection and control of these friendless. In England police magistrates are empowered, on the motion of the police, to send waifs and strays to a training ship or to a reformatory. This excellent provision in the English law ought to be incorporated in our statute book. This is a matter for the non-official members of the Legislative Councils."

Waifs and strays in Calicut.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 21st, 1916.

3. The West Coast Spectator, of the 23rd September, writes:—"It is announced that a selection for the direct appointment of Deputy Superintendent will be made shortly. In recent times, these selections have not been exactly happy, probably owing to the 'recommendation' system which plays so much mischief in official India. We know cases in which applications from candidates possessing high educational qualifications have been rejected in favour of mediocrities with poor qualifications but well connected.

"Appointment by selection has been a downright failure. We attach great importance to sheer merit and ability which can have no chance unless they go back to the old method of competitive examinations. . . . . Competition weeds out undesirables, whether high or low placed, and the public service is not the haven for younger sons of aristocacy who cannot put their brains into their work".

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 26th, 1916.

Motor car breakdowns in Malabar.

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 26th September, observes:—"The increasing popularity of motor traction in Malabar calls for the increased attention of the police and magisterial authorities. We are constantly receiving complaints of breakdowns and accidents which not only cause serious inconvenience, but result in injured limbs, and though not yet, lives. One does not, surely, like to be stranded in a strange locality in the dead of night by old engines and ricketty cars. Stricter supervision by the authorities will be greatly appreciated."

(b) Courts.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

A Magistrate's order.

5. The West Coast Spectator, of the 23rd September, has the following:—"The Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, has passed an order forbidding clerks and menials of his office to hold any conversation with private parties or vakils' clerks during office hours, 'complaints having been received of the taking of illegal gratifications by clerks and menials of the court from parties'. We respectfully commend this notice to the thoughtful attention of Mr. Jackson, who can do no better than follow Mr. Pelly's example".

New India, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The Bombay High Court.

6. New India, of the 29th September, writes:—"Almost all the Bombay papers are now protesting and criticising adversely the appointment of a Barrister in England to the Judgeship of the Bombay High Court in place of Mr. Davar. We sympathise with these protests, but we cannot understand such a go-ahead Province as Bombay entering the field so late. Time and again, the Bombay public have of late met with disappointment, for Bombay has become a citadel of bureaucracy, and high-handed action flourishes because the voice of the people is raised too late. . . . . If the public and the press had agitated clearly for an Indian Judge, they would have succeeded. In a case like this little can be done after the event. The position of the people would be strong if their voice was raised but not regarded. One great drawback of our public work is that we have gone into the habit of memorialising after the event, while our policy should be the making of a clear statement of our just demands beforehand. Home Rulers, please take note and learn from the injustice meted out to our Bombay brethren."

(d) Education.

Cochin Argus, British Cochin, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Students' strikes.

7. The Cochin Argus, for the week ending 23rd September, remarks:—"There has of late been so much political and other discontent and restlessness of a scarcely desirable type in so many parts of this country that its most sincere friends and well-wishers cannot but feel very grave regret at the tendency which would seem to be setting in among Indian students and school boys to imitate the lead of certain sections among their elders by going in for concerted agitation on even the most trivial pretexts. . . . . The tendency which is now beginning to betray itself in this country is for students and school boys to get out of their natural element and to make themselves disagreeably seen and heard under obviously and highly objectionable circumstances and conditions. . . . . Perhaps, what is most deplorable is that, among certain sections of grown-up politicians and demagogues, it is now the regular thing to encourage students and school boys to go very much out of their legitimate bounds. This is bringing about what appears to be an evil, which, if not firmly checked, may produce the most lamentable consequences to the future of this country. From participating unduly in political agitation, students and school boys are now betraying a most undesirable tendency to agitate on their own account, and the several unfortunate students' strikes that have lately been reported represent one manifestation of this extremely unhealthy tendency."

Germanism in education.

8. New India, of the 25th September, writes:—"Mr. J. E. G. DeMontmorency, of Lincoln's Inn, has written a letter in a late issue of the Times, which, although written primarily from an English point of view, is most applicable to the India of the present day. He says:

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 25th, 1916.

SIR,—There are two outstanding questions in national education of the first magnitude that need very careful consideration. One is the goal that the Government have in view, the other is the parallel effort of the churches. Your columns show that there is a great fear among educational thinkers lest the German educational goal is the one in view. Germanism in education has obtained a great hold in England and has gone much further than the casual observer thinks. The German goal of knowledge divorced from morality, of efficiency divorced from responsibility, of life divorced from religion, has made terrible headway during the last twenty years, and if that is our goal in education this righteous war will have been waged by England and her Allies in vain.

"This spirit of 'Germanism in education' is as noticeable in India as in England. The tendency of all English education in schools and colleges has been non-religious, a body without a soul, and as Mr. DeMontmorency has truly said: 'There must be daily religious teaching in all schools.'"

Students and politico-economic movements.

9. Referring to the criticism of the Madras Mail on Dr. T. M. Nayar's address to students on "Social service", New India, of the 27th September, says:—"As regards the so-called 'politico-economic movements,' the Madras Mail might take note that Indian students call these 'National' movements. It is absurd to blame Indian youths for trying to train themselves for future citizenship, the duty of every student, when the present system of education discourages them from any overt acts of patriotism. In western countries, students are taught, through Boy Scout and other, may we say, 'politico-economic' movements, to be patriots above all else. In India it does not much matter what a student is so long as he is not a patriot. Patriots in India are 'professional agitators.' Madras students convey their thanks to the Madras Mail for the guarded concession that 'by natural inclination' they are good fellows. The phrase 'the atmosphere created about him' sounds as if somewhere there were some very wicked people!"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 27th, 1916.

The Government of India Circular on Education.

10. New India, of the 28th September, writes:—"The resolution of the Government of India on the proposals of the Decentralisation Commission on the delegation of control over educational institutions to local bodies and administrations will be approved by the public in the main. . . . . The only point concerning which we should have desired a different decision on the part of the Government of India is with respect to the committee or board of visitors to the Government educational institutions. . . . . If the committees are found useful in Bengal and the United Provinces, we do not know why Madras should not have them too. It is certainly out of the question to assert that colleges here are administered to the satisfaction of unbiassed people, and there are good reasons why the association of non-officials with the management is likely to produce better results."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

The Madras Medical College.

11. New India of the 29th September, observes:—"'The desirability of having a separate Medical College for Women is now under consideration and will be shortly reported on.' This welcome statement appears in the covering letter of the Surgeon-General in the report of the local Medical College. That one institution has long failed to meet the demand of our young men aspiring to join the medical profession. Not only are a larger number of them applying for admission, but the facilities now available are being increasingly used by young men belonging to the neighbouring States and Provinces."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

(e) Local and Municipal.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Control of local bodies.

12. Writing under this heading, the West Coast Spectator, of the 23rd September, states:—"One of the chief bars to the progress of local self-government in this country is the academic way in which questions relating to it are discussed and disposed of. There is a good deal of irresponsibility and wanton waste of public money in our civic governments; and the absence of proper and timely control and sympathetic guidance makes matters worse. As a result, in several towns municipal government is regarded as a nuisance that has to be endured. These abuses could be removed were our local authorities controlled by a central authority with the only business of looking after them. A local Government Board at the Imperial head-quarters with branches subordinate to it in provincial capitals will be of immense advantage, and accelerate the progress and growth of the municipal idea. . . . . It is time, we think, the Congress committees and other political organisations took up this subject and hammered it on till it received attention in official quarters. The municipal conference that is to meet shortly can, also, do no better than take it up."

(h) Railways.

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Sept. 24th, 1916.

Reservation of compartments.

13. The West Coast Reformer, of the 24th September, writes:—"The Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay has just delivered an interesting judgment involving issues which have, of late, attracted a good deal of attention. Our readers would remember that the root cause of the ill-feeling between Indian students and Eurasians which led up to the deplorable affray at the Fort station, Madras, was the question of reservation of compartments by the Indian Railway Companies for a favoured community. . . . . So far as we are concerned, the question involved is really one of principle, and we hope that the matter will not be allowed to rest here; and if that is really the law, the Government should be induced to take early notice of it and alter it."

(k) General.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 21st, 1916.

14. The West Coast Spectator, of the 21st September, writes:—"The appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. H. F. W. Gillman as Sir Harold Stuart's successor in the Madras Executive Council must have created flutter and heart-burn in the official dovecotes. Mr. Gillman is the Fourth Member of the Revenue Board and has many seniors in the service, including the present Chief Secretary who would in the course of events have gone up to the Council The people must, on the other hand, welcome this appointment, for Mr. Gillman is one of those very few civilians who are after the Indian's own heart.

"As Collector of Coimbatore, as Inspector-General of Police, as President of the Forest Committee, Mr Gillman has given eminent satisfaction and demonstrated his living sympathy for the people. It is such able and popular officials who are wanted in the Executive Council. More seniority is no qualification; and we are glad that Lord Pentland has, at least in this matter, done an act that will give general satisfaction. We hear in this connection that Diwan Bahadur Rajagopala Achari's succession to Sir Sivaswami Ayyar's seat is almost certain.

"We would rather have an Indian official as Executive Member than a non-official who is liable to muddle and bungle and does not possess enough, courage to exercise his individuality and to make his voice effectively heard. Such type of member is a positive danger at times. Whatever his faults, Mr. Rajagopala Achari is no moral coward, he has a will of his own, and above all, has lost caste among Brahmans both on account of his trip to England and his refusal to succumb to Brahmanical influences and prejudices. He is no doubt a bureaucrat, but is above the ordinary run."

15. The West Coast Spectator, of the 21st September, writes:—"The Home Rule controversy is still going on. Even after the publication of the objects and aims of the league announced at the recent Madras meeting, people still continue to cavil at the movement, and to say hard things of Mrs. Besant. We are, however, afraid that the opponents have a cause of action, so to speak, though very feeble. We have reason to believe that the league harbours certain people who are nothing but extremists, who would fain see every Englishman embarking tomorrow for England. We are justified in this belief by the conversations we have had with some Home Rulers who, we fear, have misunderstood the real objects of their league and who consider that India is completely ripe for self-government. The greatest service Mrs. Besant can do is to keep this type of people within proper bounds, to bridle their tongue and pen and to disillusion them before they spoil a cause that is undoubtedly noble and do not try to achieve the impossible."

"Impossiblism and opportunism in politics."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 21st, 1916.

16. In a leader on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 21st September, says:—"Our recent remarks on official corruption, which we are glad to note have attracted attention in responsible quarters, have brought us a crop of correspondence some of which we cannot publish on any account possessing, as we do, a salutary fear of the law of libel. We are afraid that the cap exhibited in our columns fits more people than we had thought, for, to quote one single instance, a correspondent sends us an angry letter in which he says that the Sub-Magistrate of — has turned over a new leaf and that it is too ungenerous of us to open old sores! For obvious reasons, we are unable to reproduce here several other stories we have heard, but the general trend is that the octopus of corruption is widespread in its ramifications especially among the lower strata of the public service. In fact, bribery and corruption in these circles are regarded as fine arts, and they have made themselves fixtures to such an extent that they have incorporated themselves in the every-day life of the people. . . . . Even well-known administrators of the type of the late Sir Henry Cotton fought against the system, only to be vanquished. We are, therefore, to bow before the divinity who rules unconquered. A change can come only if the people set their face strenly against this system of blackmail, and report such cases to superior officers. But we are afraid this will never be. . . . . On the whole corruption flourishes in the lower ranks of the public service; it has not become a positive danger, but, still then, it has to be rooted out. The task is not easy for reasons already stated; we are almost disposed to think that there is no likelihood of its total destruction, but certain remedies do exist, and what they are, we shall point out in another article."

Official corruption.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 21st, 1916.

17. New India, of the 23rd September, observes:—"The Manchester Guardian is practically the only important paper in England that is keeping a close watch on Indian affairs; it is, therefore, not surprising that it has taken the Parliament strongly to task for not devoting the customary day for Indian affairs. . . . . We owe this misfortune largely to the general attitude of indifference which Parliamentarians have always assumed toward India. . . . . The reasons for a discussion this year were very strong. After nearly five years, a Secretary of State, and not his subordinate, represents the Indian Government in the Commons; and 'it is surely an anomaly and something of a scandal that not once since his appointment has the House had an opportunity of hearing from Mr. Chamberlain a full statement upon the condition of India and an exposition of his policy'. Unhappily, the present Secretary of State had kept himself silent on Indian

The Imperial Parliament and India.

New India, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

policy outside the Commons as well, and in the interests of the Empire it is necessary that his studied silence should be broken. . . . . If the sins and mistakes of the Government here are not enquired into by the Parliament, it ceases to be Imperial, and the Empire comes to be governed by a more or less absolute administration of the Dependency itself. In fact, unless the Parliament gives up its Imperial functions, there can be no shadow of excuse for ignoring the doings of the bureaucracy in India."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

The forthcoming Congress.

18. The Indian Patriot, of the 23rd September, states:—"The All-India Congress Committee will decide in a few days who is to be the President of the coming Congress at Lucknow. The Reception Committee having declined to accept the decision of the majority of Congress Committees, the responsibility has fallen on the All-India Committee for the final decision; and we have not much doubt as to what their decision will be. They will confirm the vote of the majority, and Mr. Muzumdar will be installed as President. But the election of the President will not settle the differences between those who are for Mr. Muzumdar and those who want Mrs. Besant. Mr. Muzumdar is a staunch Congressman, and has been such ever since it was started. He is an orator of the first rank, and has larger experience and deep knowledge of affairs. He has an imposing personality and a voice that will laugh at interruption. He has every qualification to guide the assembly, the power to persuade and the power to command. . . . . Mrs. Besant, though she gave in to the leaders of the Congress last time, may not show the same disposition this time. Seeing a larger following at Lucknow than at Bombay, she may be encouraged to divide the Congress in the hope of capturing a majority for her Home Rule. What the result will be we cannot say.

"Except in regard to changes in the constitution of the Congress, the votes that will count will be the votes of individual delegates and not of provinces and in the United Provinces, where Mrs. Besant's influence is large, there will possibly be a majority for her Home Rule. There will be supplemental contingents from other provinces, and there is every chance that Mrs. Besant will feel her increased strength at Lucknow; and when she feels this strength, she will not hesitate to employ it against those whom she calls the older Congressmen. . . . . Mrs. Besant will attach great importance to her conquest of the Congress for Home Rule. What will Congressmen do who have laboured for the Congress the last thirty years? They have passed through one crisis in the history of the Congress at Surat. They will have passed through another at Lucknow. All who have been watching the progress of the Congress since Mrs. Besant joined it have anticipated a rupture as the result of her incessant activity. That rupture is no longer a distant possibility. If she is to succeed, she must succeed at Lucknow. Elsewhere she has not the same glamour. And she will make a mighty attempt at the next Congress. If she were in the chair of the President, her success would have been easier. But with Mr. Ambika Charan Muzumdar in that place, her task will be made a little more difficult. Other circumstances are so much in her favour that she will not hesitate to employ them at the opportune moment. . . . . Mrs. Besant bowed to the decision of the older Congress men at Bombay. She undertook not to start her Home Rule movement without the sanction of the Congress. But she has not adhered to her resolve. Before a year had passed, she made preparations to celebrate the Home Rule Day, and she celebrated it in triumph and started Home Rule Leagues in as many places as she could find people willing to organise them. . . . . When the Empire is in the grip of war, when the utmost anxiety is felt by responsible men, Mrs. Besant finds that the most opportune moment to prosecute a campaign which, to say the least, must embarrass the Government, and in any case, must divert the attention of the people to objects which are inconsistent with the attitude which we are expected to maintain by right-thinking people. Mrs. Besant clearly aims at conquering the Congress, if she cannot convert it. . . . . She is an agitator; but something more than the qualities of the agitator is needed to sagaciously guide a great national movement. Mrs. Besant has yet to make a conspicuous exhibition of this superior virtue; and India is certainly not so poor in intellect and wisdom as to invoke the aid of an English lady, who has changed so frequently without making a corresponding change in her surroundings for effecting her national salvation."

People's Opinion, Trivandrum, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

19. The People's Opinion, of the 23rd September, has the following :—

The Congress Presidentship.

"Our readers may remember the trials and tribulations of Mrs. Annie Besant and how she has sought the presidentship of the Congress, to serve as an effective rejoinder to a Government which has proscribed her publication and set its mark of displeasure on her Indian politicians are now hopelessly divided over the question of conferring the presidential honor on Mrs. Besant this year. The extremists are for electing her, while the moderates are against it. Already the trend of the elections by the various Provincial Congress Committees on which depends the final election of the President has gone against Mrs. Besant, Mr. B. Muzumdar of East Bengal scoring. The Amrita Bazaar Patrika, a leading Bengal organ and one which represents advanced political thought in the country, comes to Mrs. Besant's rescue by a powerful support."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept 23rd, 1916.

20. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 23rd September :—"In spite of the huge noise created, we are told that recruitment to the Bengal Double Company is very poor, so far only a couple of scores of young men having come forward. From the highly coloured notices and flattering advertisements of individuals appearing in the Bengal papers, one is liable to think that the company is more than filled up!! What is this poor result due to? Are not the Bengalees going to accept a boon they were louldly clamouring for?

Recruiting in Bengal.

West Coast Spectator Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

21. Referring to the appointment of Sir S. P. Sinha as a member of the Bengal Executive Council, the West Coast Spectator, of the 23rd September, writes :—

Sir S. P. Sinha.

"We are glad that Sir S. P. Sinha has been persuaded to give up the forum, where he has achieved such brilliant success, for the calm atmosphere of the Executive Council. It is not the lust for gold or desire for fame that has led our distinguished countryman to don the official armour. He possesses both, to a remarkable degree, being the leader of the Calcutta bar and a sagacious leader of the moderate section of his countrymen. In fact, his acceptance of office is at very considerable sacrifice. Agreeing with almost all his views on Indian political questions, we are glad, again, that he has sought a new sphere from where he could be of great use to his people. . . . . There is no doubt that in the present state of Bengal a Council Member of the strong personality of Sir S. P. Sinha is needed and he has responded to the call of duty. We cannot endorse the surprise and indignation generated in certain quarters by Sir Satyendra's acceptance of office. A certain paper whose views are a combination of both the extremist's and the moderate's is sorry as well as surprised. . . . . We are further told by the same paper that it is sorry that the 'person (Sir S. P. Sinha) who acts in this manner is an Indian who was honoured only last year with the presidentship of the National Congress.' We are rather amused to see such virtuous indignation. Does the presidentship of the Congress preclude one from accepting office? What about the ex-presidents of the Congress who have been elevated to the High Court bench or to the Executive Councils? In the case of several Presidents who accepted office there was the consideration of rupees, annas and pies, but for reasons already stated there is no such motive underlying Sir Satyendra's resolve. The fact that when making high appointments the Government have, perforce, to go to the Congress camp, must in itself be flattering to that body. We have quarrel only with those who uses the presidentship of the Congress as but a stepping stone to official preferments. It has become the fashion now-a-days to throw mud at leaders like Sir S. P. Sinha for no fault of theirs other than that of their inability to shout with political dreamers, idealists and faddists, but the country knows what value to attach to such undignified performances. According to this class of people, a mere nobody or a mofussal pleader of yesterday becomes a great body to-day if he subscribes to their creed, and he gets advertisements in season and out of season free of all costs and perhaps, unasked. . . . . We do not deny that extremists in disguise, and extremists 'in uniform' never liked Sir S. P. Sinha's election, but the croakings of a few ravens should not be taken as those of a whole flight, and we know 75 per cent of our Congressmen approved the selection, and they are not sorry. Whatever they may say, there is absolutely no denying that Sir S. P. Sinha's appointment has given very considerable satisfaction in the country; and we congratulate the Government on their having persuaded one of the sanest leaders to enter their inner circle."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Sept. 24th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Reformer, of the 24th September, says:—Whatever it might be, the appointment is certainly a very clever move on the part of the Government, as the newly-appointed member enjoys the confidence of a large section of Indian politicians, and the undoubted favour of Anglo-Indians, even of the Englishman type. A man of strong convictions, courageous and statesman-like Sir S. P. Sinha's advice, founded on sure knowledge, is quite certain to prove a tower of strength to the Government of Lord Carmichael."

New India, Madras, Sept. 25th, 1916.

In commenting on the remarks of the Leader and the Statesman on the appointment of Sir S. P. Sinha to the Bengal Executive Council, New India, of the 25th September, observes:—"The new post of Sir S. P. Sinha is a puzzle to all. . . . . Sir Satyendra served the bureaucracy from his place in the Congress presidential chair by portraying Home Rule as a far off event and has, in return, won his reward. The defender of the Press Act and the offender in reference to Home Rule is, of course, not a people's man, and, if he was, the Government at this juncture would not have offered him the post. However, in this land, we are accustomed to hoping against hope and so—well, we will wait and see what Sir Satyendra does for his countrymen."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Sept. 26th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 26th September, remarks:—"Sir Satyendra Prasanna Sinha who refused to encourage Mrs. Besant's Home Rule propaganda at the last Bombay Congress is being treated in New India with becoming rancour. Mrs. Besant is the author in India of a kind of journalism of which we are yet to find a parallel. . . . . Sir S. P. Sinha is one of the most honoured men of Bengal; and against him not a single Bengalee newspaper has written anything so malevolent and disrespectful. But Mrs. Besant is a free lance. She thinks she is entitled to bespatter mud at anybody who does not obsequously follow her. . . . . Fortunately, no Indian journal has degraded itself to such a depth as to write in this strain about a man who is universally honoured, and perhaps it is impossible to suggest a remedy for this kind of reckless writings in the case of one whose sex deserves considerate treatment."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Sept. 25th, 1916.

The Governorship of Bengal.

22. The Indian Patriot, of the 25th September, states:—"Those who are acquainted with the circumstances under which Lord Carmichael was transferred from Madras to Bengal will find it difficult to believe the report to be true that Sir Michael O'Dwyer is to succeed Lord Carmichael as the Governor of Bengal . . . Between Lord Carmichael and Sir Michael O'Dwyer there is a great difference. No doubt, Sir Michael has been deemed to be a success in the Punjab; but the Punjab has always been under a Lieutenant-Governor. Bengal, though it had been under a Lieutenant-Governor, had, even when the Government of India had been in Calcutta, been dissatisfied with his rule, and with the removal of the Government of India, there was no chance of governing the province under the old system. And it must be admitted that the Government of Bengal, under Lord Carmichael, could not have been excelled. Much of its success has been due to the influence of the Governor himself; and to the confidence he has inspired in the minds of the people by his wise guidance and direction. It is to be doubted whether a member of the Civil Service, who has always exercised autocratic authority, will ever be able to adapt himself to the novel conditions of Bengal which are so different from the state of a comparatively backward province like that of the Punjab where the people have been long accustomed to render unquestioning obedience to official authority. . . . . And we believe that Bengal cannot stand the strain of another Lieutenant-Governorship, even of a man like Sir Michael O'Dwyer to whose special credit it is said that he has destroyed anarchism in the Punjab. We need not enquire whether the anarchism of the Punjab is of the same sort as that of Bengal, whether the latter has risen from the same cause, whether the remedy can be the same. In any case, the people of Bengal, their character and their temperament are essentially different from the character and temperament of the people of the Punjab. It is well to recognise the difference, the causes for the difference. The mass of the people in the Punjab are easy to manage, but not the sharp witted people of Bengal. Bengal has a reputation as the most difficult province to govern, and this is due to the different cast of mind of the people and their different nature. Experience of the Punjab will be inimical to success in Bengal. The experience of English public life, with its customary concomitant of public criticism which teaches toleration, has a superior advantage and value which cannot be realised in the Punjab. . . . . And it seems to us on the whole that a more ill-advised change cannot be contemplated at present. There may be special reasons for giving Sir Michael O'Dwyer an advancement which he cannot expect in the Civil Service wherein he has risen to the highest position open to a member of it. But there are also special reasons, we think, why an unpopular selection should not be inflicted on Bengal. . . . . It is not expedient at such a time to give any cause for the impression that Bengal is being slighted. Sir Michael O'Dwyer is certainly an admirable man, and he may even succeed in Bengal. But it is not desirable to try an experiment just now when there is a more or less certain chance of the experiment proving prejudicial before it is tried and its wisdom confirmed by actual experience. Such an experiment is always risky. It is much more risky at a time like the present when we want, not administrative experiments, but administrative success."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Sept. 27th, 1916.

Writing on this subject the West Coast Reformer, of the 27th September, says:—"A strong rumour is going round that His Excellency Lord Carmichael is to be succeeded in the Governorship of Bengal by His Honour Sir Michael O'Dwyer, the present Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. . . . . However good and well-intentioned a civilian, by his very training and association with the bureaucratic ideals of efficiency, is, as a rule, incapable of dealing with Indian aspirations with that liberal and sympathetic spirit which we associate with a statesman, fresh from the free political atmosphere of England. Of course there are rare exceptions and Sir Michael O'Dwyer himself is a civilian whose love and sympathy for the people he governs has made his regime a marked success in the Punjab. . . . . Public opinion can never get reconciled to a departure from the usual practice of appointing the Governor of a Presidency; and we trust the authorities will be wise enough not to raise another stir in Bengal at the present time."

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 25th, 1916.

The Provincial Service.

23. The Hindu, of the 25th September, remarks:—"The report of the Royal Commission on the Public Services in India is about to be published shortly, and we are certain that the publication of this report will give rise to a most acrimonious controversy throughout India. . . . . Whatever may be the reasons, we are inclined to think, notwithstanding the prognostications of several press correspondents in England, that the conclusions of the Commission are likely to cause profound disappointment, and we shall not be surprised if public dissatisfaction with the recommendations of the Commission finds very forcible expression throughout the length and breadth of the land. . . . . In the meanwhile the Provincial Services all round will have to chew the cud of discontent for several years to come if they are to wait for the Secretary of State's orders on the Royal Commission to ameliorate their condition. In some of the provinces the Local Governments and administrations have offered some solatium by listing some superior appointments for the Provincial Civil Service, but the Government of Madras have not done anything of the kind. To make matters worse they have systematically preferred members of the Indian Civil Service not only for all new appointments but also for appointments hitherto held by the members of the Provincial Service in this Presidency including Diwanship and other high offices in Native States . . . . These offices gave some opportunity to the members of the Provincial Civil Service for initiative and the exercise of administrative independence, and if they are not now held by the members of the Provincial Civil Service, it is not because that eligible men are not to be found among the members of that Service. Apart from these appointments, in the Revenue administration of the country, a proper field for the employment of indigenous talent, a great many new appointments have been created to which members of the Indian Civil Service have been appointed without any corresponding compensation to the Provincial Civil Service. In fact, every officer placed on special duty by the Madras Government is an officer of the great service which knows very well how to look after its interests. . . . . In our opinion the experience of the senior members of the Provincial Civil Service could well have been utilised to the public advantage and to the advantage of the estates of the zamindars of Sivaganga and Vijayanagram and the Zamorin of Calicut in the discharge of the duties pertaining to these posts in preference to the very junior members of the Indian Civil Service employed by the Government. To one and all of these appointments we feel that the members of the Provincial Civil Service could have been chosen with advantage, and public interests would, in our opinion, have been promoted rather than retarded by the selection to these posts of Provincial officers. . . . . The neglect of all these opportunities for the employment of Provincial officers suggests the inference that the Local Government does not believe in the capacity of the Provincial Civil Service. As we have already stated, members of the Indian Civil Service run the administrative machinery of this Province, and if on every occasion they deliberately choose the members of their own service for every new appointment, they are open to the charge of looking after themselves to the detriment of economy. We are bound to state that there is serious discontent amongst the members of the Provincial Civil Service which it would be wise policy to remove early by appropriate and speedy action. . . . . We beg to express the hope that the Government of Madras would, at least, take some steps now in this direction to remove the great soreness that now prevails in the Provincial Civil Service. Several men at the top of the service are brilliant products of the University of Madras; and we consider it very impolitic that their abilities should be allowed to languish for want of suitable opportunities for distinction."

South Indian Mail, Madura, Sept. 25th, 1616.

Gubernatorial tours.

24. In concluding a leader on this subject, the South Indian Mail, for the week ending 25th September, says:—"Having seen the utter inutility of gubernatorial tours from the point of view of the ruler as we deem it should be and from the point of view of the people we are constrained to observe that the time, energy and money spent on these tours conducted as they are in the present form are out of all proportion to the advantage gained."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 26th, 1916.

The match industry.

25. In commenting on an article in the Indian Trade Journal on the possibilities of the match industry in India, the West Coast Spectator, of the 26th September, states:—"The lack of industrial spirit and the failure of the Government to subsidise industries have persuaded Japan to capture the match market. Japan's monopoly is so complete that the very few indigenous factories have before them the very gloomiest prospect. . . . . The secret of the Jap's success is protection, and how can 'free trade India' hope to fight against him successfully? Nothing short of protection from all comers, British and foreign, will save India from industrial dependence; and with the example of Japan before them, the people cannot be found fault with if they demand State aid in all directions. It is useless to speak of industrial regeneration unless the Government are prepared to give us the only remedy that is really efficacious. But, we are afraid, this remedy will not be forthcoming till we are a self-governing nation."

26. New India, of the 27th September, writes:—"The appointment of Mr. Couchman in the place of Mr. Gillman will be received with very keen disappointment in the Province. Mr. Couchman is rarely anywhere known for sympathy as a district officer, and as the Director of Industries for a short term, we know very little except in respect of the Glass Works for which he was pleased to invite hands from a single community. He will be in charge of a department that was slowly becoming useful and popular under Mr. Gillman; and frankly speaking, we are doubtful whether the same broad-minded policy will be followed by his successor. Among those superseded by the new appointment are both Indians and Europeans some of whom would have better filled the vacancy on the Board of Revenue."

Mr. M. E. Couchman, I.C.S.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 27th, 1916.

27. New India, of the 27th September, observes:—"Napoleon once called the British Nation a nation of shop-keepers, and while we may demur to the sweeping nature of the assertion, it remains true that the British people are singularly lacking in constructive idealism and practical imagination. Indeed, the lack of these qualities is, we believe, one of the difficulties in the way of Indian administration, for, to weld India into a united whole, idealism and imagination are of essential importance. . . . . Just now, when reconstruction is in the air, the ideal must be seen as the archetype of the new order, and any indifference to idealism, or to the imagination by which the ideal is perceived, becomes almost a crime. . . . . The Indian imagination grasps eagerly at the opening made by the war for a new order of society. The memory of the past surges up into the present, and amidst scenes of past splendour the Indian patriot dreams of a glorious future for his beloved country. To the Englishman, much of all this appears as hysterical exaggeration. He, too, dreams of a future for his own country; but it is a dream 'without any nonsense about it,' a dream which means a long process of steady labour. . . . . The outcome of the difference of attitude is the present condition of this country, and unless the Westerner learns to understand the temperament of the people over wh m he has been called to rule, he will find the gulf ever widening to the very real peril of the stability of the Empire. Our rulers have, what we admit to be, the very difficult task of throwing themselves into the spirit of the Indian people. They have the task of capturing the imagination of the inhabitants of this country by themselves opening the doors of their minds to the imaginative process, and through it drawing down into their intelligence the vivid image of a great ideal. By a stroke of constructive idealism and practical imagination, the Government of India might, as by a master-stroke, harness the Home Ruler's patriotic energy to the purposes of the State. Were the Government of this country, by an act of the highest statesmanship involving, indeed, great individual sacrifice, to stand for Home Rule after the war, a wave of unparalleled devotion to the British Raj would sweep through India, and set free for the Empire's service a mighty and invincible force. India is tired of the tinkering process of Government, the only process known in Great Britain. . . . . To go against the grain is doubtless hard, but it will be found harder to go against the grain of India; and if Great Britain is ruling India for India's sake there surely should be little hesitation as to which course to take. To the Britisher the proposal may be as a leap in the dark. To the Indian there is no darkness at all, and it might be well to trust the intuition of the Indian as regards the welfare of his own land."

Imagination and idealism.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 27th, 1916.

28. Referring to the appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. C. G. Todhunter, I.C.S, on special duty to enquire into the conditions of labour recruiting in South India, the Hindu, of the 28th September, says:—"We have heard a great many complaints as regards the condition of the coolies that are recruited to the tea estates in Assam from the Northern districts of this Presidency. The Local Government have merely contented themselves hitherto with giving the necessary permission for recruitment for the tea estates in Assam and, so far as we know, no official enquiry has even been made as to the treatment meted out to the emigrants in that Province. . . . . The Agency Tracts which are already sparsely populated are being depleted of labour, and it is the duty of the Local Government to look into this question from the standpoint of this Presidency. Finally, we venture to think that the deputation of an official, however able he might be, to undertake an enquiry of this kind without the association of one or two non-officials is a great mistake. We regret that the Government have not as yet realised that the facts elicited by such an official will not be accepted by the public as wholly correct, much less his conclusions. . . . . We would suggest to the Government to associate with the Hon'ble Mr. C. G. Todhunter two non-official Indians to thoroughly go into this question, and trust that the Government will respond to public opinion in this respect. We also invite the attention of Government to the fact that a resolution to this effect was passed at the last session of the Tanjore District Conference held recently at Negapatam."

The emigration enquiry.

HINDU, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras. Sept. 29th, 1916.

New India, of the 29th September, observes:—"The aim of the Government in deputing Mr. Todhunter is evidently to find out what safeguards are necessary to replace the indenture system by one of free labourers. There is certainly undisputed need for such an enquiry and the whole country will welcome any steps undertaken with that idea. What, however, has disappointed the public in this connection is the deputation of an officer who cannot get full first-hand information on the subject of his enquiry. Mr. Todhunter, so far as we are aware, is not so proficient in the vernaculars of this province as to enable him to hold conversations with the coolies, whose views are certainly of the utmost importance to the Government. . . . . No one has disputed his sincerity or his personal capacity. Our complaint is that he has been appointed to perform a duty which he is not in a position to discharge to public satisfaction. It is on that point that the press note should have given us some fresh information, but, strangely enough, it is silent in that very respect."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The Censor.

29. New India, of the 29th September, writes:—"The reply of the Government of India on the Hon'ble Mr. Sarma's interpellation on Censorship is far from satisfactory. The withholding of the messages is said to have occurred 'in the exercise of the somewhat wide discretion necessarily vested in the Censors.' We were under the impression that the Censors were empowered to use their wide powers only in the case of military matters, and not concerning a purely civil affair like the agitation against the Press Act. The Government's answer does not also explain the peculiar feat of returning the messages after a delay of a day or two. How were the wide powers of the Censor there brought into play?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

New India and the Press Act.

30. New India, of the 29th September, remarks:—

"A real thunderer.

"Commenting on the news supplied by Reuter regarding the forfeiture of the New India security of Rs. 2,000, the Times, referring to the Home Rule League, says that 'the mischievous tendency of Mrs. Besant's propaganda has been strongly condemned in the Indian press.' This is a piece of news to India but perhaps the Times does not recognise any other press than the Anglo-Indian, which is always hostile to all Indian aspirations. It also utters another falsehood when it says that Mrs. Besant and the Home Rule League attempt 'to set Indians at loggerheads with the British in India.' We, in this country, are familiar with all the nonsense the Times puts forward on the basis of coloured information supplied by its Anglo-Indian correspondents, who are not in a position to know the real mind and heart of India. Such stories as the above are not, therefore, of any serious consequence."

A brave Christian lady.

31. The following appears in New India of the 29th September:— "Indians must feel grateful to Miss Hughes, a Missionary lady, for the part she has played in the case in the Bombay Magistrate's Court in the matter of reserved railway compartments. Mrs. Bird's improper behaviour called forth a protest from Miss Hughes. In this land which has so many Europeans, people of the type of Miss Hughes are very few, while those who are akin to Mrs. Bird are many; the latter person has objection to travelling with 'natives' and looks upon them as 'fools and niggers'; she wanted 'a damned native' to be 'smacked in the mouth'. This all is not quite new, for such things happen now and then. We, who stand for a happy relation between Indians and Europeans, can only desire for more ladies and gentlemen of the nobility of Miss Hughes, who affirmed that 'the people of India are not niggers and nobody has a right to say so'; we, Indians, on the other hand, must learn to maintain our dignity under exciting circumstances never forgetting that we are, man for man, equal to members of any European nation and will not be put down by rough and ungentlemanly behaviour of bullies; as to Mrs. Bird and creatures of the same feather we wonder why they do not fly to their native clime when they loathe this country of warmth and sunshine."

New India, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

III.—Legislation.

The Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill.

32. In commenting on the appointment of a committee of enquiry to consider this Bill, the Hindu, of the 27th September, states:—"Two years and a half have elapsed since the introduction of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill, and is it in reason to suppose that if a Commission had been appointed as proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Vijiaraghava Acharya it would not have finished its work by this time? Legislation in a piece-meal fashion, and as a sort of patch-work is very unsatisfactory. Some of the important principles underlying some of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code need reconsideration in the light of experience and the progress made by the country. There is no non-official member in the committee to take suggestions from the non-official public and to suggest amendments in the code."

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 27th, 1916.

IV.—Native States.

The Travancore Christian Succession Bill.

33. In a second article on this subject, the Western Star, of the 21st September, remarks:—"From the moment of its inception right down to the stage at which it has now arrived, this Travancore Christian Succession Bill, rather should we say its authors, have been answerable for the most glaring defiance of every canon and principle by which the law-maker in civilised countries is required to abide. . . . . With regard to the odious Travancore measure that now hangs like a sword of Democles over the heads of 80 per cent of the communities for whom it is intended, this cardinal doctrine, to which we refer, has been trampled under foot, in much the same way as some German statesman would trample the most sacred treaty or convention under foot. . . . . This Bill, to be plain, is a one-man measure. It has not in the least allowed for the circumstances, the aspirations, needs or requirements of 80 per cent of the people on whom it is to be imposed. As has been shown over and over again, in petitions, in the columns of the press, in the resolutions passed at representative meetings, and most lucidly in the dissenting minute, every principle of the measure is antagonistic to the vast majority of the concerned communities, but manifestly represents the idiosyncrasies of the chief author and his satellites. Is Travancore at so low a level of development that it depends for its laws upon the inclinations and arbitrary dictates of the individual rather than upon the consciousness and common sense of the community? Are the 80 per cent of the community, who unequivocally repudiate this Bill, to be classed with Western Star, Trivandrum, Sept. 21st, 1916.

Papuan or Congo aborgines, savage, mentally and morally undeveloped children of the world, who do not know what they want and what they should have in the way of laws and regulations, and for whom it is necessary to legislate upon despotic lines?

"We can understand an arbitrary, objectionable, ill-considered measure being drafted for the acceptation of a people, we are supposed to need it or to have asked for it, and consequently, we can understand how this eccentric Christian Succession Bill, arrived upon the legislative anvil. The matter is as plain as a pikestaff. Codification of existing custom and usage was asked for by a section of the community. This simple demand was grossly misunderstood by some of those who were entrusted with the duty of examining the demand and ascertaining how it should be treated. . . . . Like all faddists, they fancied they were brought into this world with a mission. They drafted this Bill in the eccentric belief that they had produced a magic wand which would perfect State and society. . . . . What is to be said, however, of a Legislative Council and of a Government which 'mistakes the rustic cackle of the burgh for the murmur of the world'? Faddists produced a legislative freak. The vast majority of the affected communities uprose in righteous indignation and denounced this freak. The Government should have forthwith thrown away the Bill. Instead, it kept the miserable thing dangling fearfully in the sight of the people. That was not wisdom neither was it expediency, neither did it reveal statesmanships. . . . . We believe, we write much more strongly than is our wont, but we feel that we have the fullest justification. When the vital interest of very nearly eight lakhs of the Christian communities of the State are at stake, we have to express ourselves with all the plainness and force we can command. We write strongly, but we write reasonably. We employ only the language of constitutionalism. Ours is the voice of truth, of loyalty and of trust in the final verdict, for which we shall look elsewhere than to a Government and a Legislative Council, out of whose portals the genius of statesmanship has departed, let us hope, only for the time being."

Western Star, Trivandrum, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

In the third article on this subject, the Western Star, of the 23rd September, states:—"We concluded our second article on this miserable and melancholic theme by stating that the manner in which the Bill had been resuscitated reflected no credit on those responsible for the process. The previous administration had clearly promised that legislation would not be thrust upon an unwilling community. Seeing that this undertaking had been given, it is not possible to twist or contort the pledge in any such way as to give it a significance different from that attached to it by the responsible administrator who made it in his responsible official capacity, and by those to whom it was made. . . . . This being so, we are justified in saying that the manner in which the measure was resuscitated reflects no credit on those responsible. Apart from the pledge, given by the previous administration there was no lack of the soundest reasons why the Bill should never have been disinterred, and it will sufficiently answer our present purpose if we mention only one of these several reasons. . . . . Thus, if the Bill pretended to have at anytime, raison d'etre, this is no longer existent and the measure resolves itself into a superfluity. Had it been a harmless superfluity, no one would have minded. There is the gravest anxiety and alarm because, as it stands, the Bill is a harmful superfluity, with no scope for good, but with plenty of potential power for evil. . . . . It is the case of the Syrian Christians, however, that is most deplorable in connection with this nondescript piece of legislation They form the vast majority of the affected community, but are treated in a manner extraordinarily and unprecedentedly different from that in which majorities are generally treated in the matter of legislation. . . . . It is claimed for this Bill that it is experimental, and we most readily concede the claim, but would point out, at the same time, that there are experiments and experiments. It may be a rational experiment to grow a Kew pineapple on a Peermade plantation. It would hardly be a rational experiment to plant a Travancore cocoanut seedling under the shadow of Mount Erebus. Again, it may be a rational experiment to give nationalists Ireland the gift of Home Rule, but who would say that it would be a rational or statesmanlike experiment to force Home Rule upon Ulster? . . . . The Government and the legislature are not at all likely, however, to heed at this stage the legitimate cry to which they have turned deaf ears for so long a time. Therefore, the thousands and thousands of the loyal subjects of His Highness the Maharaja respectfully and confidingly approach their beloved Sovereign and crave succour and deliverance at the just and sympathetic hands of His Highness. They beseech His Gracious Highness to save them from this impending calamity by the exercise of His Highness's great prerogative. Never before has a wise and loving ruler had occasion more appropriate for winning the highest happiness a ruler could confer both upon himself and his loving and trusting subjects than our beloved Sovereign has to-day, when so many thousands of his subjects implore him to uplift his powerful arm, in justice and benevolence, to save them from the calamity which threatens to descend upon them and their children, upon their ancient and cherished institutions, which they have hitherto preserved inviolate only because, under the wise and beneficent rule of successions of illustrious Sovereigns, every community in this State has enjoyed justice and the freedom to exist and develop along its own lines of evolution, provided these are not immoral or subversive of the general weal. . . . . In the name of the Syrian Christian communities of the State, we most humbly and earnestly pray that our wise, just and loving Maharaja will mercifully heed this sorrowing wail and grant the boon of exempting, by Royal prerogative, the Syrian Christian subjects of His Highness from the operation of a law, that would deprive them, as a community, of their legitimate rights and liberties in the vital matter of their social and domestic polity."

Mysore Municipalities.

34. The Karnataka, of the 23rd September, writes:—"It is said that Mr. A. R. Banerji, C.I.E., has, in some connection, expressed it as his opinion that the municipality of a growing city like Bangalore,—where projects of vast magnitude involving an enormous outlay of public funds are to be carried out,—should have a paid official President, and that an honorary non-official regime [of which we have just made a beginning] is not calculated to secure the highest possible amount of efficiency in municipal administration. To make such a proposal at the present time—when public opinion in the State, and more markedly outside the State is eager as it never before was to obtain municipal freedom,—requires an amount of bureaucratic one-sidedness which we were till now not prepared to credit Mr. Banerji with. Our impression of him was that, being a kinsman of such distinguished congressists as Sir K. G. Gupta and even Sir S. P. Sinha,—he would, far from attempting anything likely to weaken the fibres of representative government in this country, be anxious for opportunities to encourage honorary public work and strengthen the cause of self-government. But if the rumour above noted be true, we are only compelled to admire the wisdom of the progenitors of the Indian Civil Service system which can, as effectively as a machine, bureaucratize Indians no less than non-Indians."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

The water-supply of Ernakulam.

35. In a leader on this subject, the Malabar Herald, for the week ending 23rd September, says:—"Whenever we have occasion to write about the water works in the neighbouring town which lies across the lagoon, we are forcibly reminded of what the Madras Government has been doing, for well-nigh half a century, if we are not mistaken, to improve our water-supply. Proposals after proposals have been made from time to time in this connection, and yet the unfortunate people of British Cochin have to live like the Jews expecting the advent of the Messiah, and the probabilities seem to be so strong that the expectation of the people, for a supply of good drinking water, will be like that of the Jews: with this difference, that the latter will be eventually disappointed in their hope of seeing the Messiah just as the former in en joyinga pure water-supply for their physical regeneration. Be that as it may, one particular point has to be noted. A poor and insignificant Native State (i.e., Cochin) with a limited revenue, has been able to supply the people of its capital town with fresh water from the Alwaye river within a period of nearly four years, while the Engineering Department, with its plentiful resources both in men and money, has not been able to confer a boon on the people of British Cochin by improving the water-supply of this town. This is, indeed, a sad commentary, and yet we have to be satisfied with it, probably because we are not looked upon with that measure of sympathy which is determined by the fact that Cochin contributes a large share to the Provincial revenue."

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Indian Patriot, Madras, Sept. 26th, 1916.

The Baroda bubble.

36. Referring to the administration of Baroda, the Indian Patriot, of the 26th September, observes:—"Income that is almost stationary, a population that is slowly dying down, a people that are poor beyond all description and administrative departments that are acknowledged to be in confusion—that is the picture that comes from Baroda, acknowledged to be the most advanced State, and held up as an example worthy of imitation. A few years of compulsory education have not certainly brought in the millenium; and a State has not much glamour for us, whose working population is drawn away in search of work and wages."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

37. The Swadesamitran, of the 25th September, writes:—The fact that Roumania, which patiently waited for nearly 24 months to decide which side to join, has now joined the Allies is a positive proof of the certainty of victory for the Allies. She knows the plight to which Belgium and Poland have been reduced and she is fully aware of the losses suffered by Servia. Further, the King of Roumania again is a scion of the German Royal family and should naturally have a regard for the German Emperor. From the beginning of this war, Roumania has been receiving her stock of arms and ammunition from Germany. Thus she is bound to Germany in numerous ways and when she cuts asunder this tie and joins the Allies, there is no doubt whatever that she has thought well before she moved and that she feels certain of the Allies' victory, and hopes to gain some advantages by joining them. Now let us see what the Allies have gained and what Germany has lost by Roumania having joined the Allies. The strength of the Roumanian army including officers is one million, and she has 1,500 guns. None can deny that this is a clear advantage to the Allies. Apart from Germany having lost the co-operation of this big army, she has lost also in another way. She was till now receiving wheat, one of her main foodstuffs, from Roumania. She cannot have it hereafter, seeing that the British blockade has made it impossible for her to get articles from any other country by sea, what doubt is there in Germany having incurred a serious loss by being deprived of even the articles which she was getting from Roumania by land?

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sept. 25th, 1916.

The reasons why the Allies are sure to be victorious.

Besides the gain to the Allies by Roumania having joined them, there are other reasons also why they are sure to gain a victory. It is to be noted that the Allies have realised that it would not do for them to fritter away their strength individually and that they have, for the last three months, been working conjointly. The efficacy of this conjoined effort is seen clearly from the fact that Verdun has been attacked by the enemy only once within the last three months and that even this attack proved a failure. Then again the details of the war were till recently attended to by the Civil Government. But the whole responsibility in this matter is now vested in the military authorities. The introduction of the compulsory recruitment system in England has also come in timely to stengthen the British army materially. There are still 3,800,000 men in the British Isles available for the army and arms and ammunition are being manufactured in very large quantities. That Russia has got over her difficulties and is now in full vigour is clearly shown by her victories in Galicia. Thus the Allies are growing stronger every day, while Germany has no means of improving her strength. So it is certain that Germany will be defeated, if not this year, at least in the next year.

38. Referring to the various conjectures and forecasts made by astrologers and also by notable men, such as Sir Conan Doyle and Sir Alfred Turner, regarding the termination and result of the war, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 23rd September, writes:—There is, however, one element of truth in all these forecasts. Not only the enemy but all those who have entered the war will have to face the calamities which would result from the depletion of the nation's manhood. However that may be, as the British are fighting for justice, their best reward will be its vindication. Their economical loss is, therefore, not very material to them. As regards the heavy loss of men, it may be said that it wards off the prospect of another war for several centuries to come. The loss of the allies, therefore, is tantamount to positive gain. The loss of the Germans, on the other hand, is their positive ruin.

The war.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 26th, 1916.

Conscription and the war.

39. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 26th September, in its news columns, writes:—All those that are born in Europe must lay their lives on the battlefield. For the present this compulsion does not extend to women. But even women may not succeed in escaping it. It is now an accepted creed everywhere that every citizen should be ready to sacrifice his life in the cause of his country. For the present, however, this creed is not being followed in our country. It is desirable that those who wish to offer their lives for the cause of the country should be enabled to do so. It seems likely that eventually conscription will be extended to India too.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 25th, 1916.

India and the expenses of the war.

40. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 25th September, writes:—The War Office is asking the Government of India to contribute to the expenses of the war. If we contribute, we shall have the right of enquiring whether what we give is being usefully spent. We can ensure that our voice in this respect becomes effective. But the taxes we are paying at present are already heavier than we can bear. It is impossible that we can pay more. It is imperative that there should be a careful scrutiny of the ways in which the taxes are being utilised at present. A close and impartial scrutiny will show that at present a large part of the revenue is being spent on wasteful extravagance. The salaries and allowances paid to officers are exceedingly high. If we compare these scales of pay with those of Japan, we shall find that the Government of India are a most extravagant type of administrators. While even the Prime Minister of England receives a salary of seventy-five thousand rupees per annum, the Viceroy of India receives three lakhs as pay and another 3 lakhs as allowances. If we should contribute to the expenses of the war, it must first be ensured that there shall be no fresh taxation on that account, but what can be saved by arresting lavishness in the administration will be contributed towards the expenses of the war. Those who draw a pay of Rs. 100 can be asked to pay 10 per cent and even 50 per cent of their income, if the situation demands it. The poor are already on the verge of death because they are starving. Out of a population of 310 millions more than 40 millions can get only one meal a day. How can fresh taxes be imposed under these circumstances? Enamoured of the grand style of the Government of India, the Native States are ruining themselves by beginning to ape them. Extravagance needs to be checked in these States, too, so that what they save thereby may be contributed to the war fund. Retrenchment can never be possible when this work is entrusted to the officers themselves. The Mysore Retrenchment Committee is an instance in point. The higher officers increase their own salaries and decrease the pay of peons and petty officials. It is, therefore, imperative that a Retrenchment Committee should include also a few bold, independent and truthful non-officials. If this is done, the Government may then rightly call upon the merchant classes to bear a larger share of the expenses of the war.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 28th, 1916. (English columns.)

A summary of the war.

41. In an article giving a retrospect of the principal events since the beginning of the war, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 28th September, observes:—"The tide of offence has been stemmed. The German retirement or rather their expulsion from Verdun has commenced. The war is not yet ended. But we have begun to see the beginning of the end. When Germany had to retire from the precincts of Paris, her weakness became visible. Their retirement from Verdun has more than established their importance (impotence?). Their diplomacy, too, is not of a high order. The very fact that Roumania, so much attached to the central powers and so indebted to Germany, should have joined the Allies goes to show that low ebb to which German diplomacy has drifted. The situation in Greece is another illustration of the point. The revolutionary movement is visible everywhere. The success of the Allies is completely assured, and it now appears to be only a question of time."

42. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 19th September, writes:—We published in a recent issue that the Allies had commenced their formidable and universally successful attacks on all fronts. Sir Douglas Haig, Great Britain's capable General, acted with great foresight in the battle of the Somme, and left no stone unturned in his efforts to capture important positions.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 19th, 1916.

"Great push by the French and the Allies"

A glance at the war news reveals the fact that the position at Somme, which the Germans took nearly two years to prepare, was very strongly fortified. There were dug-outs, subterranean hospitals and other substantial constructions. Our gallant Commander, General Haig, has by the capture of these strong positions shown to the Germans how the British with their munitions of war and their military strength were able in a few weeks to reduce these fortresses which their constructors imagined to be impregnable.

Since their capture Great Britain and her Allies have suspended their attacks in order to consolidate these positions. Now again we are put in possession of the good news by the telegrams of the day before yesterday that our gallant General has renewed his offensive against the positions constructed only a few months ago. What will be the fate of these when those which it took years to construct could not stand? We hope that our brave General will raze these German fortifications to the ground. It is a matter of pleasure that most of the positions in that locality have been captured by Great Britain.

Where are the Kaiser and Von Hindenberg who have been priding themselves on their munitions, supplies of powder, bombs, science and militarism? General Sir Douglas Haig will now have taken the measurement of Von Hindenberg who has recently been transferred to the western theatre from the eastern front where he was responsible for the numerous defeats sustained by Germany.

From a careful consideration of all these matters emerges the fact of the limitations of German strength. Hence no one can hope to withstand the Allies, especially Great Britain whose resources are so vast. We have often thrown light on this subject and it is unnecessary therefore to labour the point.

It is sufficient to say that in this third year of the war the destruction of Germany will be complete.

43. The Juridah-i-Rozgar, of the 22nd September, writes:—A few days ago a report was spread that the Germans were engaged in an attempt to start their campaign on the British front and Field-marshal Von Hindenberg had been transferred thither.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

"The British advance and the repulse of Hindenberg."

The editor, referring to the accounts given by the Pioneer's special correspondent and other correspondents regarding British success and German defeats, says: "There is no doubt that the British success definitely proves that successive German reverses have begun and that the Germans will very soon be defeated at every point."

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Police.

44. Referring to a case in the Bombay Presidency in which the police charged certain Muhammadans with gambling in a mosque, the Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd September, remarks:—There is none to arrest big officers playing at cards in English and Indian clubs staking their money. The police do not make their appearance there but they are ever ready to arrest the voiceless.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

remarks that it is impossible to guess how many lives would be sacrificed on the strength of evidence fabricated by the Police, if there were no High Courts in the country.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

The C.I.D.

46. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd September, says:—It is a surprise that the annual expenditure on the C.I.D. has, in the course of the ten years following 1904–1905, increased sevenfold. Is such an increase found in any other department of the Government? A twofold increase of expenditure on education is considered very high. The expenditure on sanitation has not grown to any considerable extent. What can be the reason for such a large expenditure on account of the C.I.D. whose officers make much ado about nothing? It will be seen from the figures that this increase, which has created consternation in everybody's mind, is attributable to the suspicion with which the different provinces in India are looked upon by the Government. No doubt, the rulers should be careful, but it is wrong to suspect unnecessarily and increase the cost of administration in consequence. The sympathetic utterances of His Majesty King George V and of statesmenlike Lord Hardinge bear testimony to the loyalty of the Indians, and it is improper to continue the C.I.D., which came into being under conditions which no longer exist. It is still more improper to increase the expenditure on that department. We, therefore, pray that the Government of India will take steps to abolish the department.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 22rd, 1916.

The Police and handcuffs.

47. Referring to the prayer of the Nattukotta Chetties of Devakotta to His Excellency the Governor relating to the handcuffing of members of their community, the Manorama, of the 22nd September, points out that it is not proper to give special concessions in such matters to any community on religious grounds, but that if the petty police officers ever abuse their powers out of evil motives, it is the duty of the higher officers to see that it is put a stop to.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Writing on the same subject the Kerala Patrika, of the 23rd September, points out that it is both unnecessary and improper to handcuff all offenders when arrested, that, as far as possible, bail should be allowed, in such cases, and that if the Nattukotta Chetties should have their grievances redressed, His Excellency the Governor should take care to appoint only honest and capable persons as Magistrates.

(b) Courts.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

Criminal administration report.

48. In commenting on the review by the Government of the Madras criminal administration report for 1915, the Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd September, says:—It is highly gratifying that the Government will enact a Village Courts Act ere long. Village Panchayat Courts are to be constituted which will play a very important part in the administration of criminal justice in the Madras Presidency. But to give the village magistrate an important place in such a Court will not be productive of any new good. Ordinarily a Magistrate is subordinate to the Collector and cannot act independently. We hope that the Government will consider this and free the Panchayat Courts from official control. . . . . A perusal of the review of the Government will make it plain that with this review the Government have begun a liberal era in the administration of justice.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Administration of criminal justice in the Presidency.

Referring to the administration of criminal justice in the Presidency during the year 1915, the Kerala Patrika, of the 23rd September, rejoices at the decrease in the number of offences under the Indian Penal Code, and thinks that the increase in those under Special Acts should be attributed either to the wickedness of the people themselves or to the defective administration of justice. It notes with satisfaction that the cases tried by the village magistrates have increased in number, and that the proposed Village Panchayats Bill provides for the abolition of the system of putting in stocks, now often resorted to by certain village magistrates, and draws attention to the necessity of reducing to a minimum the inconveniences now experienced by witnesses in criminal cases.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

The recent notice in the Presidency Magistrates' Courts.

49. Referring to the recent notice, put up in the Presidency Magistrates' Courts in Madras, to the effect that the clerks and peons should not converse with the parties during office hours, the object of which is to prevent the clerks from receiving any illegal gratifications from them, the Kerala Patrika, of the 23rd September, observes that this practice, which also obtains in some of the Cutcheries has no doubt to be put a stop to, but that the higher authorities ought to see that the clerks do their duties properly, as otherwise, the parties who now gain their objects by paying a small sum of money to them, however illegal it might be, would and could be put to great inconvenience and hardship by these clerks under some pretext or other.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Sept. 25th, 1916.

The Bombay High Court.

50. The Lokaprakasam, of the 25th September, criticises the appointment of an English Barrister as a Judge of the Bombay High Court in the place of the late Mr. Justice Davar, in spite of there being several competent vakils in Bombay, and observes that it is unfortunate that such an appointment should have been made at a time when the Indians are clamouring for a larger number of appointments being thrown open to them.

(d) Education.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

Universities and commercial education.

51. Referring to the importance of increasing the popularity of scientific knowledge of commerce among Indian youths, and to the reluctance of the latter to follow this branch of study unless their attainments are likely to find recognition in the shape of a University degree, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 22nd September, remarks that while the Bombay University has already instituted a Faculty of Commerce and the Calcutta University too is about to make like provision before long, we cannot help deploring the inertness of the Madras University in this respect.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 28th, 1916.

The Madras University.

52. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 28th September, writes:—The Madras University goes on committing blunder after blunder. They extended the two years' B.L. course to three years, and again reduced it to two years and were also the cause of a strike among the students. If individuals commit such blunders, it is easy to ascribe it to the limitations of their intellect. What shall we say of the blunders committed by such cultured and learned men as constitute a University? It is useless to become members of a body like this unless each individual member is alive to the duty before him and realises the consequences of any measure he may assent to.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 19th, 1916.

"Mussalmans and college."

53. The Qaumi Report, of the 19th September, concurs in the views of the South Indian Educational Association of Madras that a certain number of seats should be reserved for Muhammadan students in Government and aided colleges, and that college classes should be opened in the Government Madrsa-i-Azam. The paper hopes that Government will not delay in disposing of these demands which are just and reasonable.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916.

The need for Muhammadan education.

54. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 20th September, writes:—This week the Muhammadan Educational Association of Madras invited the attention of Government to two important points upon which we cannot avoid throwing some light. The first suggestion of the Association is that "some seats may be reserved in colleges for Muhammadan students and the second that the Madrasa-i-Azam may be raised to the grade of a college."

We have recently written that in the Madras Presidency the education of Muhammadan boys is becoming harder every day. It is a deplorable fact that students, who, by virtue of their having passed the Matriculation or School Final Examinations and being eligible to join college, may not do so. They have either to give up the idea of higher education in despair, or are obliged to seek admission into district colleges and leave their native places and separate themselves from their people.

The Presidency College is the only Government educational institution in Madras and when its doors also are practically closed to Muhammadan students where are they to go to? Every year those boys, that issue from the various high schools after completing their courses of study and with the object of obtaining higher education, are first confronted with the difficulty of securing accommodation in the colleges. This s disagreeable and deplorable. On the one hand Muhammadans are blamed for their backwardness, while, on the other, when they try to advance they are brought face to face with such difficulties.

Colleges are intended for students and conversely students are intended for colleges and if in one college accommodation is not available, it should be in another.

It is also evident that most Muhammadan boys prefer going to Government Colleges because most professors attached to them are able men, the laboratories large and well-equipped and the management satisfactory. Besides some consideration is shown in the matter of fees which is not the case in Mission colleges. In the latter the full fee is charged and some of the optional subjects are actually made compulsory.

For example, a glance at the city of Madras will reveal the fact that there are two important Missionary institutions, the Christian College and the Veterinary College (sic); Pachiyappa's College is intended only for Hindus while the Presidency Government College serves all. There is not a single national Muhammadan college either in Madras or in the districts. The result is that generally Muhammadan boys are not provided with accommodation in the Presidency College and hence they are obliged to apply for admission to Mission colleges. The difficulty does not, however, end there, for, often the students are sent away for want of accommodation and the poor seekers after knowledge are obliged to migrate to Trichinopoly, Vellore, Banglore, Tinnevelly and even to Hyderabad.

It can easily be imagined how difficult it is or easy for those poor students to leave their homes and to go further afield for their education. But who is responsible for this? We do not disclaim national responsibility in this matter. Undoubtedly we ought to have established a college of our own but the fact of our national poverty is manifest. We cannot undertake such a difficult task unless the need is felt by the wealthy and sympathetic members of the community. Hence we must ask our benign Government by virtue of the sympathy, which it has with Muhammadan aspirations after higher education, to remove this obstacle, for, no one but the Government can lightly bear the burden of educating the poor. If accommodation is not available in the Presidency College, the inevitable conclusion is that the Government should establish another college, and for this purpose the Madrasa-i-Azam is the most suitable of all institutions. This high school, under the supervision of the Government, is conferring an appreciable benefit upon Muhammadans, as the Association has just mentioned "The time has now surely arrived for the Madrasa-i-Azam to be raised to the grade of a college".

Recently His Excellency Lord Carmichael's Government of Bengal has sanctioned certain concessions and facilities for Muhammadans especially in the matter of education. One of these is that a fixed number of seats shall be reserved in colleges for Muhammadan students and, if all the seats are not filled up by them, the vacancies may be filled by students of other communities. We consider that a similar resolution by which Muhammadan boys may be assured of gaining admission to any college if they happen to be within the prescribed number can be enforced in the Madras colleges and in similar institutions elsewhere. Assuming that the number of Mussalman students seeking admission is small in any year, it will be no loss to a college, for the seats can be filled up after the appointed date.

We hope that His Excellency Lord Pentland will pay special attention to the suggestion made by the Association, for, this is a long-felt want beset with difficulties every year. As the improvement of higher education among Mussalman youths is a pressing necessity, it should not be put off much longer. Our benign Government is fully aware that this is one of the many obstacles that bar the way to higher education in this Presidency. Another special reason for reserving seats expressly for Muhammadan boys in the Presidency College, is that our kind Government has recently appointed a special Assistant Professor for teaching Arabic, but what advantage can be derived from such an appointment when no accommodation is provided for the students? In view of the actual existence and importance of the Arabic class this matter cannot be delayed any longer and our long-felt need compels us to request our benign Government to grant us this concession.

The Government of Madras is sure to follow the example of the Government of Bengal very soon and relieve the Muhammadan boys of these disabilities and difficulties. It is hoped that the Director of Public Instruction, who is well acquainted with the facts, will support the Association's resolution, and do his utmost to get the Mussalman's reasonable request sanctioned.

(e) Local and Municipal.

55. The Qaumi Report, of the 20th September, writes:—There was a long discussion at the meeting of the Corporation held on Saturday last on the subject of its annual report. The most deplorable portion is the page on which the President has placed it on record that "a large number of deaths has taken place among Muhammadans on account of their purdah system." This is a very erroneous idea which has often been exposed; but most Europeans are under the same wrong impression. They neither take the trouble to understand the principles of Islam; nor do they care to make themselves acquainted with the condition of Muhammadans, but in season and out of season they exert themselves to display their base in false reasoning. It is regrettable that although these persons live with us, among us and near us, yet they seem to have vowed not to know our real conditions.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916.

"Purdah and the public health."

More regrettable still is it to find that the President has not admitted his mistake. On the contrary, he has committed another blunder and written: "The purdah system observed in Madras differs from that observed in Arabia, Turkey and Egypt."

We cannot but point out to the learned President that he has not considered the exigencies of purdah in this country. It is requested that he may kindly think over this question at his leisure. The Muhammadan law is not enforced in Madras in the same way as it is in Arabia, Turkey and Egypt. Are the quarters, houses and bazaars in Madras constructed on the same principles as those in the aforesaid provinces? This is a question which touches civilisation and in giving a reply to it thousands of politicians will have to take sides.

(h) Railways.

56. Referring to this report, the Swadesamitran, of the 21st September, says:—We are surprised at the statement in the report that the Railway Companies have done all that lay in their power to secure the convenience of the pilgrims during their travel. We do not think it was one of the duties of this committee to plead for the Railway Companies. The only question which the committee had to decide was whether the rule that only eight persons could sit in a compartment was contravened or not and this is answered in the affirmative. The duty of offering an explanation for this rests on the Railway Companies and not on the committee. It is stated in the report that Railway Companies have now put an end to the conveyance of pilgrims proceeding to see festivals in cattle trucks, and it is recommended that the Government should prevent the companies from resuming this practice. As far as we know, the statement of the committee does not seem to be borne out by facts. The reason assigned by the committee for overcrowding in trains, namely, that passengers crowd into a train whether there is room in it or not and refuse to get down is a curious one indeed. We do not see the rationale of the argument that passengers refuse to get down once they get into the train, when it is the duty of the companies to provide sufficient carriages in every train for carrying the passengers travelling in them. Referring to the sanitary arrangements in trains, the committee says that they are very satisfactory and that the only reform it would suggest is that a scavenger should go in every train to clean the lavatories as often as possible. We wish that it had made some suggestions for improving the quality of the water supplied to passengers at intermediate stations. While we agree with its remark that the sweetmeats sold to Indian passengers at some stations and the refreshment stalls where these are kept are not as they should be, no Indian can approve of the remedy suggested by the committee for this, namely, that the old system of leasing out the right of vending sweetmeats in stations may be revived by the companies and with the money collected thus a number of officials may be appointed to test the quality of the sweets. If the vendors are made to pay for the right of vending sweets, they will only raise the price of these sweets. No fees are collected from those in charge of the European Refreshment rooms and the Railway Companies carry all their things free of charge. Mr. Ramachandra Rao has rightly protested against the recommendation of the committee in this matter on the ground that, instead of the companies providing the same facilities for Indian travellers as are enjoyed by the Europeans, even the existing facilities should not be removed. We hope the Government will note this point.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The administration of railways

57. Quoting the remark of the New Statesman, a liberal newspaper in England, that the management of railways by private companies will be detrimental to the interest of the people, and referring to its advocacy of the State management of railways in England, the Swadesamitran, of the 22nd September, writes:—If there should be a complaint in England that in railways under the management of private companies, the interests of the people are not cared for, what are we to say of India? In England the capital required for the railways is supplied by the companies, while in India the major portion of the capital invested in railways belongs to the Government. Even in the matter of management in England, it is the persons born and bred up in that country that exercise the powers, while in India we need not say much of the share which the Indians born and bred up in India have in the management of the railways. Therefore we cannot but reproduce here the statement of the New Statesman, with reference to railways in England, that if their management were left in the hands of private companies, they would be intent only on getting the largest amount of money from the agriculturists, merchants and travellers. We agree with the opinion of this paper that, if a country is to prosper, the Government should itself take over the management of railways from the hands of private companies, so as to allow the agriculturists to make a living, to enable the merchants to improve their condition by overcoming foreign competition and to secure to the people all conveniences.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

A political speech at Simla.

58. The Prapanchamitran, of the 22nd September, writes:—There was recently a public lecture at Simla by Sirdar Yogendranath Singh in which he pleaded for the establishment of a Council of rich and influential men to help the Government of India in the administration of the country. When every one is saying that the time is gone when the people could be ruled by the arrogance of wealth and power and that this is a period of democracy, it is surprising to see this Sardar attaching importance to wealth and power. An attempt was made in the time of Lord Minto to constitute such a council as is now suggested by the Sardar; but it proved fruitless. Now the whole country is ringing with the demand for swaraj. The people are anxiously awaiting the end of the war and the grant of this boon by the British public. If the Sirdar pleads for the constitution of a council of notables at this juncture, one can easily conceive what impression will be created in the minds of the Indians by his speech. The gentleman who presided at the Sirdar's lecture is none other than Sir Valentine Chirol, against whom Mr. Tilak has filed a suit for defamation. He seems to have remarked that the Indians were idealists, and that they were aspiring for things which they could not easily get in the near future. Let any one say what he pleases. We hope the Government realises that there is a unanimous cry for swaraj from the Indians.

A speech at Simla.

Referring to the speech of Sirdar Yogendra Singh at Simla, the Keralodayam, of the 26th September, adversely criticises the view of the Sirdar and of Sir Valentine Chirol, namely, that a Chief's, Council is an essential thing, takes exception to the remark of the latter that the difference between Englishmen and Indians is, that the former deal only with practical politics, while the latter are such as hold Utopian ideas, and observes:—As Anglo-Indian papers, like the Capital, criticise the action of the Viceroy and others, who entertain such politicians as their guests, we have every reason to think that our future is likely to be a splendid one.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 26th, 1916.

A few higher appointments.

59. In a leader under this heading, the Hindu Nesan, of the 22nd September, takes exception to the appointment of a European Judge in the place of Mr. Justice Daver of the Bombay High Court and observes:—The number of Indian Judges in this High Court was only two, and this appointment has now reduced it to one. It is rather surprising that there should be only one Indian Judge in the Bombay High Court, when there are more in the other High Courts. We cannot appreciate the wisdom of the Bombay Government in depriving the Indians of even an appointment which was held by them till now, when they are anxiously expecting to have larger privileges and appointments.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The deputation of Mr. Todhunter to inquire into the condition of the Indian coolies in other countries.

60. Referring to this subject, the Prapancha Mitran, of the 22nd September, observes:—How can an Englishman and that a member of the Indian Civil Service understand the grievances of the Indians as easily and well as an Indian? It would have been better if a highly placed Indian official had been deputed for this purpose, and it would surely have given better satisfaction to the people, if a non-official Indian had been chosen. Even now, it is not too late to depute an Indian along with Mr. Todhunter to make the inquiry.

PRAPANCHA MITRAN, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 23rd September, comments on the same subject as follows:—The Ceylon Times says that the Government of Ceylon denies all knowledge of the deputation of Mr. Todhunter by the Madras Government. The wording of the telegram which announced the deputation of Mr. Todhunter was, no doubt, vague. But it was stated therein that he was to inquire into the circumstances under which the Indian coolies were recruited in Ceylon and the Malay States, and, if it was intended that Mr. Todhunter should go to these places and make the enquiry, would not the Government of Madras have communicated the fact to the Ceylon Government? The denial of the latter Government of any knowledge of this deputation raises a doubt as to whether Mr. Todhunter will make the inquiry in Ceylon and other places or in the Tamil districts here. It is not the method of recruitment alone to which exception is now taken. We agree with the Bombay Chornicle in asserting that, if Mr. Todhunter has been deputed only for enquiring about the method of recruitment, it would not at all be sufficient. It will be the duty of the Local Government to explain its intention by means of a communiqué. The sufferings undergone by the Indian coolies in other countries have to be ascertained. The competition between planters themselves have made their own condition as well as that of the coolies pitiable, and the former are now prepared to suggest remedies to improve the situation. Our Government should see whether the grievances of the coolies will also be removed, if the suggestion of the planters is adopted? It is the duty of the Government, which stands loco parentis to its Indian subjects, to see that they are treated as men, that they get adequate wages for their labour and that they live happily in sanitary surroundings, wherever they are.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 20th, 1916.

Government bonds.

61. The Andhraprakasika, of the 20th September, says:—Mrs. Besant offered Government promissory notes in payment of the security demanded from her in connection with the "Besant Press," but the Chief Presidency Magistrate refused to take them and wanted the whole amount to be paid in currency notes. The public are under the impression that Government bonds are legal tender in Government offices. But from the security proceedings referred to above, it follows that the Government are not bound to accept them. This gives room for the apprehension that when the Government themselves who issue the bonds do not accept them as legal tender, nobody else will accept them. The Government will, therefore, do well to order their acceptance in all public offices.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Sandal oil industry.

62. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd September, invites the attention of the Government to the large measure of success that has attended the sandal oil industry in the Mysore Province, and trusts that they will follow the example set by the Mysore Government and create facilities for the establishment of factories for the extraction of oil from the sandal wood available in the British territory.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

His Excellency the Governor's tour.

63. The Andhraprakasika, of the 23rd September, notes with great satisfaction the fact that in his recent tour His Excellency the Governor of Madras arranged for his replies to addresses presented to him, being translated into Tamil, printed and distributed among the people beforehand.

SUVARNALEKA, Tanuku, Sept. 15th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

64. Referring to the new deposit amounts paid by Mrs. Besant, the Suvarnalekha, of the 15th September, says:—What should be said of a person who is wasting her money like this without knowing where and how to spend it usefully? See, in two days the Government are going to devour these Rs. 10,000 and the printing press also. Could she not have paid this sum to the War Fund? We must see to the Press Act being repealed and freedom restored. What is the use of wasting a large amount unnecessarily?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

The Philippine Islands.

65. In its column for contemporary opinion, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd September, has the following:—The Philippine Islands have a Governor-General and a Council like our country. The Council consists of eight members of whom only three are Americans, while the rest are the natives of the Philippine Islands. In the Council of our Governor-General, on the other hand, only one member is an Indian out of the eight members. The Assembly in the Islands corresponding to our Imperial Legislative Council consists of members who have all been elected by the people. It sends two of its members to the United States to represent it there. In our Legislative Council, on the other hand, only a certain number of members are elected and the Council does not send any representative to England. Again the people of the Philippine Islands elect their own Governors except in a few backward provinces. At least half the number of officers in the higher grades of judicial service and all the Subordinate Judges should be the natives of the Islands. In 1911, 67 per cent of the Civilians were natives.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd September, says:—If the Madras Bank and Banks of that sort should be of any use, Indian representatives should be given a share in their management. Work is being done in this direction and we hope it will bear fruit.

The Madras Bank.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

67. The Andhrapatrika, of the 22nd September, in its editorial columns on "the vernacular tests," observes:—The compulsory tests for Deputy Collectors, District Munsifs and Sub-Judges have hitherto had text-books prescribed for them. The candidates used to gain facility in reading the second vernacular and writing grammatical prose in it; but the Government have now introduced a radical change. They held that the tests as they existed were literary, while the officers needed only a knowledge of the colloquial tongue; and so, there are to be no longer any text-books prescribed. . . . . It may be admitted that for those who know a language to some extent, no text-books need be prescribed, but it is a wrong notion to think that those that are entire strangers to the language can gain any accurate command of it without studying text-books. One result of these new regulations is evident to us. The Deputy Collectors, District Munsifs and Sub-Judges that pass the vernacular tests in future will have less knowledge of the vernaculars than those of a previous batch, and there will be fewer opportunities for the cordiality between officers and people such as now subsists on account of a love, on the part of the officers, of the literature of the people. Many other benefits that exist under the present arrangement may also be lost on account of this change. We regret that regulations have been published which render valuable tests merely nominal. From a good many considerations, it will be seen to be highly essential that Deputy Collectors and such officers should have an adequate knowledge of a second vernacular. We, therefore, request that the Government will not deprive their officers of a love of the literature of the people and the consequent sympathy of the former towards the latter, by dispensing with the small acquaintance that may be cultivated with the literature of the vernacular through a study of the prescribed text books.

The vernacular tests.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

68. The Andhrapatrika, of the 25th September, says:—The Government have now abolished the division of lands in the Kistna delta into A and B. It would have been better if the Government had considered along with the question of A and B class lands, that of the earthenware pipes which do not allow a sufficient supply of water to flow through them. It appears that the Government have already ordered the suspension of the division of lands into A and B classes during the cultivation seasons of 1915 and 1916. The experience gained during these two periods will help towards the solution of the question of earthenware pipes. We pray that this question may not be considered as settled, but that the Government will, in the liberal spirit in which they have dealt with the question of A and B class lands and that of darkhasts, deal with this question also, so that the ryot may enjoy the full benefit of their decision in the matter of A and B class lands and allow his co-ryots also the benefit of timely water-supply.

A and B class lands.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 25th, 1916.

69. The Sasilekha, of the 22nd September, says:—The Government of Madras have appointed the Hon'ble Mr. C. G. Todhunter on special duty to enquire into the grievances of the Indian coolies in places like Ceylon and the Malay States. It would have been better if a non-official European or an Indian had been appointed. The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. Todhunter may perhaps be favourably disposed to the cause of the employers of these coolies. Some are of opinion that he may not be able to understand the grievances of the coolies well.

Indian coolies.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

70. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 23rd September, in its news columns, writes:—The Indian Moslems have begun to organise meetings in order to proclaim that the demand of parliamentary rule for India is an unavailing cry. This has led to a feeling among a section of the Hindus as to whether it would be possible to continue their brotherly attitude towards the Moslems.

The Moslems and the Home Rule.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Sept. 26th, 1916.

Mr. B. G. Tilak.

71. Referring to an article in the Commonweal taking exception to the demand of security from Tilak and observing that his dauntless adherence to the cause of the country places him on a level with men of the type of Garibaldi and Mazzini, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 26th September, writes:—Mr. Tilak aspires to none of the fame of these men. He is content to render what service he can to his country and to the world, by espousing the good and stamping out the wicked elements in it. He thinks it his duty to bear up whatever trouble he may come across in the attainment of his object, and he hopes that nemesis will overtake those who frustrate his object: This is what is generally believed of Tilak. We are unable to analyse his true character. Whatever it may be, the fact that many an honest and truthful person adores him proves that Mr. Tilak has in him some extraordinary qualities. We would, therefore, wish to see the Government of India remain on good terms with Tilak and win his affection. It is the prime duty of a Government to befriend those who are staunch and fearless advocates of truth and justice and who are for that reason adored by the masses.

Sampad Abhyudaya. Mysore, Sept. 27th, 1916.

The Home Rule League.

72. In an article referring to the progress of Mrs. Besant's Home Rule League, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 27th September, proceeds to express its warm admiration for Mrs. Besant and concludes as follows:—Mrs. Besant is the one person truly able to build up a sincere feeling of cordiality between Englishmen and Indians so as to lead to the salvation of both these nations. We deem it the prime duty of every Indian to support her Home Rule propaganda and help her to reach the goal for which she is striving.

Manorama, Calicut, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The dispensaries at Irikkur and Sultanbattery.

73. Referring to the closing of the dispensaries at Irikkur and Sultanbattari for want of Sub-Assistant Surgeons, the Manorama, of the 22nd September, points out that if there be a paucity of Sub-Assistant Surgeons, retired persons may be employed as such, and observes that it will be better to close, if necessary, the dispensaries in healthy quarters than do so in malarial places.

Satyanadam, Ernakulam, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The Missionaries and the India Office.

74. In approving of the measure taken by the India Office to prevent the indiscriminate despatch of Missionaries to India, the Satyanadam, of the 22nd September, says:—The object of this measure is to prevent the Germans from coming out to India, and it is certainly proper and essential. Hence there is no room for any misunderstandings on the part of the people in this matter.

Manorama, Calicut, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

The Brighton hospital and the wounded Indian soldiers.

75. The Manorama, of the 22nd September, speaks in glowing terms of the arrangements that are made in the Brighton Iospital for the accommodation of the wounded hndian soldiers and of the services rendered to them both by the Government and the people of Brighton.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

Advisory Council of Ruling Chiefs.

76. Referring to the concessions to be secured as a result of the war, the Yogakshemam, of the 22nd September, points out that, so far as could be gathered from certain actions of the Government and some official utterances, they intend to establish an Advisory Council of Ruling Chiefs who, by the bye, cannot bestow adequate attention on the affairs of their own States, and observes that, if these be the reforms that are proposed to be made, the Indians are not, in the existing circumstances, likely to be content with them.

Yogakshemam, Trichur, Sept. 22nd, 1916; Lokaprakasam, Trichur, Sept. 25th, 1916.

Sir S. P. Sinha.

77. The Yogakshemam, of the 22nd, and the Lokaprakasam, of the 25th September, fail to understand why Sir S. P. Sinha, who some time back resigned the membership of the Viceroy's Executive Council, should have now accepted that of the Bengal Executive Council.

Sir S. P. Sinha.

Referring to the appointment of Sir S. P. Sinha as a member of the Bengal Executive Council, the Keralodayam, of the 26th September, observes that he, who resigned the Executive Membership of the Viceroy's Council, appears to have accepted this appointment, because he promised at the time of his resignation that he would serve the Government, either in England or in India, if he should be called upon to do so.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 26th, 1916.

The ensuing congress.

78. Referring to the election of the Congress President, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 20th September, points out that though Mrs. Besant's strenuous efforts for self-government qualify her in every way for the high honour, the Government's attitude that towards that lady makes her election impossible, and hopes that the All-India Congress Committee will duly consider the matter, and elect to that place one who is loved and respected by all.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sept. 20th, 1916.

The Indian Congress.

In a long leader under the heading "The Indian Congress," the Nazrani Deepika, of the 26th September, refers to Mrs. Besant as being an extremist of the type of Mr. B. G. Tilak, and observes that, if she, who has incurred the displeasure of the Government by the tone and manner of her advocacy of "Home Rule" for India, be elected as President of the next Congress, as some Indian leaders wish to, it will certainly be a death-blow to the Congress itself, in that it will then fall into the hands of the extremists, which means that it can no longer expect to command the respect and confidence of the Government, which were testified to last year by the presence of His Excellency Lord Pentland at its sittings.

NAZRANI DEEPIKA, Kottayam, Sept. 26th, 1916.

Weights and measures.

79. In reviewing the last year's report of the Revenue Board on the subject of weights and measures, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 20th September, says:—It is petty merchants that generally use false weights and measures, and it is the poor that suffer mostly therefrom. The authorities concerned ought to do everything possible to prevent this, in view of the fact that the prices of almost all articles have gone up.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sept. 20th, 1916.

Pay of certain Government servants.

80. The Kerala Patrika, of the 23rd September, dwells upon the necessity of increasing the pay of subordinate officers, such as schoolmasters, sub-assistant surgeons, the clerks of the Registration department, etc., and hopes that the Government will be pleased to consider the matter.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

The appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. Gillman as a Member of the Madras Executive Council.

81. The Kerala Patrika, of the 23rd September, expresses satisfaction at the appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. Gillman as a Member of the Executive Council, in succession to Sir Harold Stuart, though the claims of several of his seniors have thereby been overlooked, and observes that seniority alone cannot count for much in the matter of an appointment to the Executive Council.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

"His Excellency the Viceroy and the political condition of India."

82. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 21st September, referring to the long speech delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council held on the 5th September in which His Excellency expressed his appreciation of the loyalty shown by Indians notwithstanding all the enemy's intrigues and threw light on such questions as the new laws, regulations, industry, commerce, the increase in financial power and other important matters, says:—From the views of the Viceroy it is certain that His Excellency has the fullest confidence in the loyalty of the people of India, and that we shall surely secure the reward of this directly the war is over. The Muhammadans of India especially will be amply compensated for having rendered loyal service to their King and country at this critical juncture, for having tried to maintain peace and for having kept their word.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 21st, 1916.

All Indian subjects should ungrudgingly render all possible aid to the Government. They should also endeavour to fully justify this speech of the Viceroy's.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 19th, 1916.

Our press and theirs.

83. The Qaumi Report, of the 19th September, on the authority of the London Times, dated 4th September, writes:—"The Society of the Yorkshire Press convened a meeting of the proprietors, editors and managers of the weekly papers at Leeds, and it was unanimously resolved that the prices of all the weekly papers should be raised from one anna to one and a half annas."

This is the condition of papers in countries like the continent and England where there are thousands of paper factories and where all commercial facilities are fully available. But our country "India" which, though dependent, is still patient with and grateful for her lot. In any case our papers are published but readers purchase them reluctantly. Subscribers are indifferent to the condition of the press, nor do papers know what is going to happen to them.

When the Qaumi Report was first issued, the price was fixed at three pies per copy, as neither the proprietor nor the editor was a burden upon its resources. Its objects were national service and the education of the people. But owing to the extraordinary effect of the war the editor was obliged to give up his appointment. Although it was optional to him either to continue the paper or to give up his appointment; but he did not give preference to his personal advantage. By giving up his appointment he gained independence. Even now the editor is not a burden to the Qaumi Report, he has resigned himself to God and maintained the paper and its policy.

At this juncture no mention need be made of the many difficulties that confronted the editor. He has not been unaffected by the extraordinary war regulations. He was overcoming unimaginable difficulties with great resoluteness. Added to this is the treatment extended by envious and short-sighted men to the Qaumi Report.

All this has been done and it is hoped that it will continue so to be done. But we do (not) wish to besmirch the reputation of the Qaumi Report either with flattery or fear. We know full well what our patrons are like. Not one of them will befriend us in bad times. Our nation has not yet learnt what sympathy is, and it does not know how the editor of a paper lives in this dangerous time or when he is going to die. Undoubtedly some papers are well-to-do and are excepted, for, they consider the paper to be a commercial commodity and the means of realising their ambitions and greedy aims. They are innocent madmen and no one questions them as to how many teeth they have in their head.

But the state of free and independent papers is complicated and dangerous and according to the saying:—

"Afraid of the hunter and concerned about the gardener;
"Our nest is between these."

The greatest difficulty is how to get paper which is being sold at a marvellous price.

We have neither thousands of factories, nor commercial facilities in our country, nor has the nation sufficient sense of self-respect to tolerate the high price willingly. We are obliged to arrange the Qaumi Report on the principle—

"If the time does (not) suit you, you must make endeavour to suit time."

Until we get a fair supply of paper we shall study economy. We do not know what more difficulties we may have to face in future. We are not concerned about the continuance or otherwise of the paper, for, by the grace of God we have, to a certain extent, succeeded in giving publicity to, and exposition of, our object. Now national feelings and enthusiasm are echoing and no Mussalman is untouched by the Qaumi Report.

84. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 23rd September, writes:—By the maintenance of loyalty, God, His Apostle (may God bless and preserve him!) and all are pleased. God says, "Whoever does not thank man does not thank God." While this is the commandment of the one God, who will strive to be deprived of this gift? See what favours have been shown to us by our mighty King-Emperor. What has not been done by His Majesty for our convenience and comfort and what is not being done in this respect, not only as regards our secular affairs but also in our religious matters. In spite of the fact that war has been declared on the Turks a proclamation was issued to keep our holy places immune from any attack. This promise was made not only on behalf of His Majesty, but also on behalf of the Allies and we have thus been reassured and put at our ease.

What is loyalty?

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

If we do not return thanks for this, we shall be regarded as acting contrary to the divine command. Will not this be the case? We do not mean that we are ungrateful, but what we do mean is that we should leave no stone unturned to show our gratitude in every possible way. Now is the time for it. There are several ways of doing this. Some are possible and others are impossible. We should adopt only the possible ways and thus assure His Majesty that in our loyalty to him we are not swerving a hair's breadth. Such a manifestation of loyalty would be productive of excellent results after the war.

IV.—Native States.

85. In a leading article commenting on the annual report on the jail administration in the Mysore Province, the Shimoga Vrittanta, of the 20th September, observes:—The fact that 4,940 persons or over 67 per cent of those who were arrested were subsequently acquitted shows that the police and also the people were guilty of bringing a large number of false or frivolous charges. Unless the Government strike terror into the minds of the police by meting out deterrent punishment to those who concoct cases, the police establishment which avowedly exists for the protection of the people will, on the other hand, operate as a source of harrassment. We congratulate the Government on the facilities they have provided for imparting religious instruction once a week to Christian, Moslem and Hindu convicts through Missionaries of their respective cults.

The jail administration in Mysore.

SHIMOGA VRITTANTA, Shimoga, (Mysore Province), Sept. 20th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject the Vokkaliyara Patrike, of the 27th September, making the same comments as above, adds:—It is surprising to see, however, that the report states that as many as 835 among the convicts belong to the class of cultivators. We cannot help wondering how these simple-minded and God-fearing rustics who are alien to the extravagant ways of city life could go astray in such large numbers and merit jail life. It seems probable that the Koruchās and other tribes who have latterly taken to cultivation have been included among the cultivating classes. It is impossible that crime can be said to be increasing among the agriculturists proper.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, Sept. 27th, 1916.

86. The Yogakshemem, of the 22nd September, congratulates the Mysore Darbar on their decision to take such measures as will attract Indian labourers to Malanad, and hopes that this step, which will give them work in their own country, will be a means of preventing their emigration to foreign countries.

The Mysore Darbar and Indian labourers.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Sept. 22nd, 1916.

87. The Keralodayam, of the 26th September, speaks in very high terms of the administration of Baroda, and observes that the Cochin Darbar will do well to follow in the footsteps of that State, especially in the matter of the village panchayats, so as to make them useful to the people.

The administration of Baroda.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Sept. 26th, 1916.

Malayali, Quilon, Sept. 23rd, 1916.

88. The Malayali, of the 23rd September, points out that most of the Christians in Travancore are against the "Christian Succession Bill," which, they think, will tend to increase the volume of litigation and create dissensions among the members of a peaceful community, and hopes that the Darbar, especially His Highness the Maharaja, will not do anything which is so stoutly opposed by a majority of the community.

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 28th September, writes:—"An Anglo-Indian contemporary asks why appointments to Indian High Courts are not sought after by leading English barristers. There was a time when eminent jurists like Comer Petherham, Arthur Collins, James Mackay and Douglas Straight thought it worth the while to accept posts in India. The times have changed and we get only third or even fourth rate lawyers. Does the reason lie in the deterioration of the independence of the High Courts and the steady executive encroachments thereon? Another reason may, probably, be the unattractive salary, namely, Rs. 5,000, which is easily made even by junior barristers in England."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 28th 1916.

High Court Judges.

2. New India, of the 4th October, writes:—"Whipping as a punishment even for adults is being still resorted to in a large number of cases in India, though not on so extensive a scale as prior to the amendment of the Act in 1909. . . . . The agitation raised against that inhumanity, largely assisted from England, induced the Government of India to decrease the number of offences punishable with whipping. Consequently there was a decided drop in those so punished, and in 1911 only 618 were whipped, though Magistrates had the power to whip 3,029 more criminals. . . . . Happily, magistrates are not now as much inclined to inflict the maximum number of stripes as they were prior to 1909. But what is objected to is not so much the severity of the punishment as its degrading tendency; and from that standpoint the position is certainly worse to-day than a decade ago. . . . . Whipping should be utterly abolished. It is cruel, brutalising, degrading, and against all sound penology."

New India, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Whipping in Madras.

(d) Education.

3. The Indian Patriot, of the 3rd October, observes:—"It has become a sign of patriotism to decry the study of the English language and to eloquently praise the beauties of the vernaculars. To study a foreign language is difficult, it is argued, and when the key to knowledge is the foreign language, very few get it. . . . . English is the language of the modern world. Our aspirations we owe to the spirit we have imbibed from that language. They are enemies of Indian progress who belittle the study of English. By all means paint in the most brilliant colours the greatness of the vernacular. But what is our want at present from the view point of a nation? . . . . In our schools and our colleges English must occupy the same high position as it does to-day. Transfer it to a minor level and less attention will be devoted to it. Our lawyers must know the language well; so must the large number who are employed in the service of Government. . . . . In British India the English language must be studied, if anything even more accurately and elaborately than now. Only our glamour for the language should not end in the disastrous denial to scientific students access to higher study; because they have not a high percentage in English. . . . . The vernaculars must do for the masses more than the mere study of the English language; but in the field of higher education in any subject we cannot neglect the language of our rulers. Native States may very well do without English, but in British India, that language must always lead to distinction and wealth."

(e) Local and Municipal.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 28th, 1916.

4. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 28th September:—"'There are insurmountable material and moral obstacles to a fair election in India' writes a contemporary. We agree; and the obstacles are nowhere more serious than in the field of municipal politics. The generality of would-be Councillors proceed to work on the belief that everything is fair in love, in war and elections. Misrepresentation, undesirable influences, weight of power and wealth are the weapons generally used in Indian election campaigns—and even bribery is sometimes resorted to.

Municipal elections.

"A fair election, whether it be to the Legislative Council or to a Municipal Council, is almost an impossibility in the present state of affairs in British India. And we are afraid there will be no improvement unless the voters realise their responsibilities, and candidates are inspired by nobler motives. Something could be achieved by public opinion strenly discouraging candidates whose only qualification is that they can afford to spend a few hundreds or thousands on their election campaigns."

Wednesday Review, Trichinopoly, Sept. 27th, 1916.

5. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 27th September, remarks:—"The acceptance of the membership of the Executive Council of Bengal by Sir S. P. Sinha has set the croakers once more reviling him, and we are not surprised that Mrs. Besant in her New India condemns him as betraying the cause of India by accepting office. . . . . Two things are clear, first, it is not lucre that induced him to resign his first appointment; and, second, whatever reasons might have induced him to resign the law membership cannot be made public now. As for searching explanations of his actions, that may be left to his professed enemies among whom there is not a single Indian who is anybody in this country; they are apparently confined to a certain clique in Madras who have no other business than bespattering with mud our best men.

Sir S. P. Sinha.

"We would not, of course, care for Mrs. Besant's criticism: her antipathy towards Sir S. P. Sinha as for every sane Indian politician, is due to his very severe handling of her half-a-sheet of note paper on Home Rule at the Subjects Committee of the last Congress. The personal bias and prejudice which she has against him is an explanation, as it cannot be an excuse, for her criticisms."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 30th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 30th September, states:—"Commenting on Sir S. P. Sinha's appointment the Bengalee says:—'The country will appreciate his surrender of a splendid income for the service of the motherland, and we wish him every success in the great position he will soon fill.' The Bengalee's comments are valuable in that they are those of a nationalist. And Sir S. P. Sinha is the man who was so ruthlessly attacked the other day by New India for accepting the post. We have very great respect for Mrs. Besant, and we can only regret that she has thought it fit to level an unwarranted attack on a most distinguished countryman of ours, whose only fault is that he is suspicious about the Home Rule ginger bread so alluringly dangled before our eyes by Mrs. Besant."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Sept. 28th, 1916.

6. The West Coast Spectator, of the 28th September, states:—"We understand that the Government are getting down a Bengalee to run Henke's tile works at Feroke. Rumours are also current to the effect that the works will shortly be placed on the market. If this is true, we should ask why the Government should get down a stranger when there are people in Malabar who can be expected to work the concern. The proprietors of Shoranur tile works have shown commendable enterprise; can they not be asked to run the works either as managing agents or lessees?"

Henke's tile works.

The European Association.

7. New India, of the 30th September, has the following :— NEW INDIA, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

"Persons of 'Greater importance.'

"The following passage occurs in the note explaining the objects of the European Association of Calcutta :—

Every European in this country should endeavour to realise that as one of the ruling race he has far greater importance as a political entity than he might ever have attained to in the British Isles. May be he is to a considerable number of Indian subordinates the embodiment of British rule His status in the country as one of the ruling race gives him political responsibilities not necessarily involving personal activity which he should not hesitate to accept.

"Commenting on it, the Leader observes that 'the racial arrogance reflected in the above extract is responsible for that assumption of superiority which hurts and irritates the Indians most. The existence of this sort of feeling must stand in the way of the much-desired reapproachment between Indians and Europeans in this country'. We entirely agree."

The new Member of Council.

8. United India and Native States, for the week ending 28th September, writes :—"When Sir Harold Stuart retires from service next month his place in the Madras Executive Council will be occupied by Mr. Gillman. The new member is an able civilian and is much less unsympathetic with Indian aspirations than many members of the heaven-born service." UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

The emigration enquiry.

9. United India and Native States, for the week ending 28th September, remarks :—"The Government of Madras have deputed Mr. C. G. Todhunter, I.C.S., for a period of four months to enquire into the conditions of the recruitment of cooly labour for Ceylon and the Malay States. As several thousands of Indian labourers from South India are now in those Colonies the decision of Government to appoint an officer to report on the state of affairs is to be welcomed. But we cannot say the same thing with reference to the officer selected for this delicate task. No one doubts Mr. Todhunter's ability to conduct the enquiry ; but he labours under certain disabilities which are likely to detract from the usefulness of his report. In the first place he is an official and a member of the bureaucracy generally supposed to be in sympathy with the planters and employers of Indian labour. Secondly, he is not conversant with the South Indian vernaculars and he will thus be seriously handicapped by being unable to converse with the labourers to obtain first-hand information concerning their wants and grievances. Perhaps the most serious objection consists in the fact that Mr. Todhunter will not be associated with an independent non-official Indian gentleman in conducting the enquiry. . . . . As it is not too late even now, we hope that the Government of His Excellency Lord Pentland will consider this aspect of the question and supply the omission if the result of the proposed investigation is to command general acceptance at the hands of the South Indian public. Mr. Todhunter was, we believe, once Protector of Emigrants in Madras, and in this capacity he was not known to have evinced in any way deep sympathy with them. Although there is no reason to suppose that he will enter on his duties in an unfair spirit we would like an Indian gentleman, in whom the people of the Presidency impose confidence, to be associated with him." UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

Indian Christian representation.

10. United India and Native States, for the week ending 28th September, observes :—"The Christian Patriot has properly drawn attention to the singular fact that among the members of the Madras Legislative Council there is not even a single Indian Christian member either official or non-official. This is an anamoly which scarcely admits of any justification, for the omission cannot be due to any paucity of qualified Indian Christian representatives. Until recently there was at least one official member on the council, Mr. Swamikannu Pillai, who worthily represented Indian Christian interests though in the restricted capacity of an official member. Now, however, even he has disappeared with the result that a highly intelligent and thoroughly loyal UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

community like the Indian Christians, numbering more than two millions in India, is not represented on the Madras Council although Madras is one of the most advanced Provinces in India and Indian Christians form one of the most advanced communities in the Presidency. The Indian Christians of the Presidency have an undoubted grievance in this respect and we hope that the Madras Government will soon rectify so glaring an omission involving injustice to a community which has deserved well at the hands of the Government."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 2nd, 1916.

The President-elect of the forthcoming Congress.

11. New India, of the 2nd October, writes:—"We congratulate Babu Ambika Charan Muzumdar on his election as the President of the coming Congress at Lucknow. . . . . We sincerely hope Babu Ambika Charan Muzumdar will undo the mischief of his predecessor in the Congress chair. What we want is a clear statement of the country's demand for Home Rule immediately after the war. His presidential address will be looked forward to with eagerness and anxiety, and we sincerely trust his pronouncement will be such as to meet with the approval of all his countrymen, a major portion of whom are believers in Home Rule. Meanwhile, our hearty congratulations to our Venerable President-elect."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 2nd, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 2nd October, says:—"We congratulate Mr. Muzumdar on his election as the President of the next Congress which will assemble at Lucknow in December next. Of his qualification for the office there can be no doubt. He is an accomplished orator, and can move vast audiences. A venerable and imposing personality, grown grey by age and service for the country, well equipped with knowledge of administrative problems, an incisive critic, a valiant defender of the noblest aspirations of the Congress, but never aggressive or violent in his utterances, Mr. Muzumdar holds a high place in the esteem of his countrymen. . . . . Nobody who knows Mr. Muzumdar or his political views could suggest for a moment that he will fall short of the Congress ideal. . . . . No man knows better than Mr. Muzumdar what the Congress stands for. He has fixed ideas on each one of the subjects, considered and accepted by the Congress, and never can a doubt be entertained of his steady adherence to the principles underlying them."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

The Bengali Double Company.

12. Referring to the remarks of the Englishman on the failure of Bengalis to come forward to enlist in the Bengali Double Company of the Indian army, the Indian Patriot, of the 3rd October, remarks:—"Why should an Anglo-Indian paper exult at the failure of the Bengalis to make up the full number required. We have no doubt whatever that the required number will be forthcoming. Military service is entirely new to Bengalis yet they are taking to it, though it may be slowly. A military race is not produced in a day. Circumstances, association and traditions have all an effect on recruitment for military service. The Bengalis have had no recent experience to induce them to take with avidity to military service. The men who have come forward have shown an admirable spirit. Why not encourage that spirit instead of ridiculing it? We do not think that the attitude of the Englishman, the language used by it, is anything more than playful. Nevertheless an antagonism is created without any purpose. Does the Englishman really desire that the Bengali Company should be a success? Does it rejoice at the prospect of Bengali soldiers displaying the same heroism and valour that other soldiers do? There is nothing in the remarks of the Englishman to show that it welcomes the services of Bengalis. It seems to think that the war can be managed without the preferred aid of the Bengalis; and it is rather sorry that the war gave them an opportunity to boast of their possibilities which, however, it is glad, have not been realised. The spirit is bad; it is contemptuous."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

Indians and the Board of Revenue.

13. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 3rd October, says:—"In our leading columns early last week, we pointed out that there is serious discontent among the members of the Provincial Civil Service in this Presidency in consequence of the stepmotherly treatment which they have been receiving at the hands of the Madras Government, and we urged upon the latter to throw open immediately a number of superior appointments to satisfy the present claims of the members of the Provincial Service, and to take every opportunity to employ them in the appointments newly created by the Government. We have to recur to the subject with another substantial grievance of the members of the Provincial Service which has since taken place. In May 1910 the late Diwan Bahadur R. Raghunatha Rao moved in the Madras Legislative Council a resolution to the effect that an Indian, if duly qualified, might be appointed to one of the Memberships of the Board of Revenue, and in doing so, urged the simple consideration that if the law permitted, and there were Indians in the service fit to occupy the place, he did not see any reason why the Government should not appoint one of them. The Hon'ble Sir Murray Hammick who then replied on behalf of the Government, said that at that time though there were Indians fit to be appointed, they were not sufficiently high in the grades of the service either in the Provincial or the Indian Civil Services, to be appointed to one of the Memberships of the Board; but that when in due course, Indians did come to occupy such senior places the Government will find no serious technical difficulty in appointing them; for the time being they found themselves unable to do so. . . . . It is now six years since this debate took place, and the contingency then contemplated by Sir Murray Hammick has arrived in the circumstances which have caused a vacancy in the Board of Revenue by the appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. Gillman to the Executive Council. What has been the result? This week's Gazette will announce the appointment of Mr. M. E. Couchman, a Collector of the second grade in the Indian Civil Service, to the vacancy in the Board of Revenue. Having regard to the declaration of the views of Government made by Sir Murray Hammick we cannot conceive the reasons which have influenced the Government to pass over the claims of all the three Indian Collectors of the Provincial Civil Service, two of whom are in the first grade and one in the second grade doing the duties of a special appointment and all of whom are senior in service to Mr Couchman. If any one Indian had been superseded, it is conceivable that he did not, in the opinion of the present Government, come up to the standard of fitness they may have fixed for the Board of Revenue, but it is impossible to believe that all the three Indians who have been made Collectors because they possessed, in the words of the statute of 1870 which enabled their appointment, 'proved merit and ability,'—that all these three Indians have lost that merit and that ability by having been Collectors for a number of years . . . . Is it that the Indian Collectors as a class have deteriorated in efficiency, or is it that Indians qua-Indians are found unfit to be in the Revenue Board? We refuse to believe that Lord Pentland's Government hold the latter view and would fain consider that they had failed in their efforts to act under the special powers of the Act of 1861, or to obtain the Government of India's permission to 'list' the post. But if this is not so, there could be no more striking commentary upon the extent to which the claims of Indians to higher appointments in the Public Services of the country, are being resisted resolutely at the present time by the representatives of vested interests. . . . . Lord Pentland's Government would have earned the thanks of a devoted class of Indian public servants if, under the special circumstances of the case, sections 3 and 4 of the Indian Civil Service Act of 1861 had been availed of by them at present. . . . . Does the Madras Government desire to shut the door against even such small acts of justice to Indian claims, that it should now pass over all the Indians now in the rank of Collector in appointing to a Membership of the Board of Reveuue? . . . . It is difficult to believe that His Excellency Lord Pentland would have acceded to an appointment which, if the significance of all the facts had been appreciated, we think he could hardly have consented to make. It is to be hoped that the matter will not be lost sight of by Non-official Members of Council who will assemble for the Council meeting in November and that they will consider it their duty to elicit the circumstances under which the claims of Indians have been so deliberately ignored."

Hindu, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Indian political reform.

14. The Hindu, of the 4th October, writes:—"A cryptic telegram from Simla, through the Associated Press, informed us yesterday that the Non-official Members of the Imperial Legislative Council, with three exceptions, have submitted a joint memorandum to His Excellency the Viceroy on constitutional reforms to be introduced after the war. It is pointed out apparently by way of accentuating the importance of the memorandum that its signatories include three ex-Presidents of the Indian National Congress and three ex-Presidents of the All-India Moslem League. We have not, however, been favoured yet with a copy of this memorandum which must be valuable as containing the opinions of the distinguished individuals who are the Non-official Members of the Imperial Legislative Council. Nor is any clue given to the public as to why these gentlemen felt it incumbent upon them to precipitate at this juncture their views upon the Viceroy upon a subject, which is an all-important and all-absorbing one in the minds of the people of the country, without taking the numerous other leaders in the country into their confidence and without waiting for the resolutions of the Indian National Congress, the next Session of which is not far off. The step which the Members of the Imperial Legislative Council have taken seems to us to be a regrettable one for various considerations. The country in general is in the dark as to what their proposals are. They had no mandate whatever from the constituencies which elected them to act on their behalf in this matter, and the scheme of reforms which they have suggested may be either sound or unsound, may fall short or be in excess of the reasoned expectations of the bulk of the intelligent Indian public. There is a general impression that the question of Indian reforms to be introduced after the conclusion of the war is a matter in correspondence between the Indian Government and the Secretary of State. The most hardened optimist cannot cherish the delusion that we shall get any substantial reforms in the course of a few months, and it is vain to imagine that we shall be worse off when the reforms do come for not having put forward our suggestions before the Government at the earliest possible date. To our mind, the country is advancing in rapid strides, in intelligence, knowledge and enterprise and the aspirations of the people for a proper political status are growing in an ever-increasing degree. It does not seem wise on the part of our representatives in the Imperial Council to fetter the future of the country by putting forward unnecessarily any hand-to-mouth scheme of political reforms."

New India, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

"Is emigration essential?"

15. Referring to the suggestion of the Bombay Chronicle that the Emigration Act be abolished, New India, of the 6th October, says:—"If emigration should continue to grow as unpopular as it has during the past four years, the number of Indians to be benefited by it will be almost infinitesimal. . . . . The question is whether such a small 'outlet for our surplus population' is worth being kept up when we consider the disadvantages of having to maintain it. In the first place the persons that return to India after a stay in the Colonies are generally of a type whom it is advisable to pay for staying out of the country. We send out healthy labourers of unobjectionable morals, and when they return, they are broken down both physically and morally. Then we have to take note of the influence on this country. The Colonials, having come into contact with our lowest class of people, entertain a feeling of disgust towards Indians of all classes. Thirdly, there is the unsettling influence on the public mind caused by the unjust treatment meted out to our emigrants. No doubt the Government are now trying to diminish it; but how far their efforts will be successful is an open question. All these disadvantages strengthen the case for the abolition of the Labour Emigration Act; and we hope the suggestion will not be set aside as unpractical by the Government of India."

New India, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

Political inconsistency.

16. New India, of the 6th October, writes:—"We are surprised to see, in the brief notice in the Madras Times of the entertainment given to Sir Harold Stuart yesterday by his 'friends and admirers,' some names of Indians who lately protested strongly against the Press Act at the great Madras meeting in Victoria Hall. The presence of High Court Judges was, of course, proper enough, as they are outside politics, and ought to show courtesy to any high official. But it is painful to see the names of some of those who took an active part in the protest on behalf of New India showing honour to the man who took an equally active part in putting the Press Act in force against it. Happily, some of the leaders of the meeting were more consistent and refused to do honour to the man against whose action they had protested. Quite properly, the 'friends and admirers' sent no invitation to New India, but the editor learnt with horror that good Mr. Kesava Pillai, in the kindness of his heart, had asked for an invitation for her, which was, again quite properly, refused. One does not shake hands with one's would-be executioner, and presumably the would-be executioner does not wish to shake hands with his hoped-for victim. We believe that Banquo's ghost was not ivited to Macbeth's banquet, and the editor has not yet a ghost, to go uninvited."

17. New India, of the 6th October, has the following:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

The Censor.

"The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma.

"This good representative of Madras in the Supreme Council has drawn the attention of the Government and of the country to the improper behaviour of the Madras authorities in regard to telegraphic messages addressed to New India and to the Hindu. Major-General A. N. Bingley admits, but does not condescend to give any reason for, the delay or withholding of telegraphic messages to the two papers named. He states that the messages were delayed or withheld by the Censors, and evades the third question by the extraordinary statement that it is not possible to discriminate between messages connected with and messages unconnected with the war! If the Censors are gifted with so little intelligence as to be unable to distinguish a message condemning the Press Act or the imposition of a security on New India from a message conveying war news, it would be well to employ gentlemen of a higher grade of intelligence, as they are obviously unfit for their duties. A 'failed F.A.' might be engaged in their stead.'

"This is what I expected. I replied at once, saying that the envelope and enclosures could be seen at New India Office at an hour named, and have held them ready ever since. The Inspector did not come, but has written asking if the envelope cannot be sent. I do not care to let it out of my own custody, as it is the only proof I possess of the accuracy of my statement.

"A considerable expense must have been incurred in buying thousands of these tracts and circulating them through the post. Has money been placed at the disposal of some Collectors for the purpose, or are they generously buying them by thousands out of their own pockets? Would it not be more dignified for the bureaucracy to come out openly, and to use public money publicly to oppose me in the press by argument, as well as to use their power to handicap me, in any answer I may make to their arguments, by the danger, if my replies do not suit them, of losing the Rs. 19,000 which they hold of mine? My anonymous opponent, safe in bureaucratic support, will not be checked if he stirs up hatred and contempt against the lovers of freedom in India; whereas a careless word of mine, or an effective reply, may make the Local Government forfeit one of my various securities. However, perhaps the combat is not so unequal as it seems. 'Thrice is he armed, who hath his quarrel just.'

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

MALABAR HERALD, British Cochin, Sept. 30th, 1916.

An Executive Council for Travancore.

19. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 30th September, has the following:—"The question has again been raised by some of the Travancore papers, whether the time has not yet come for the constitution of an Executive Council in Travancore, or for the adoption of such arrangements as would contribute to the lessening of the functions of the Diwan, by a process of decentralization. . . . . It was, we believe, during the regimé of Mr. P. Rajagopala Achari that we persistently insisted upon the necessity of this reform. But, nothing practical has come out of it, while the question is again pressed by those who seem to be in close touch with the Travancore administration. . . . . If we go in search of practical instances of decentralisation we have a surfeit of them both in British India and in other advanced Native States as Travancore. And the fact that such has been the case elsewhere affords ample proof in support of the contention that the conditions in Travancore are as favourable for the introduction of a system of decentralization as those which demanded its necessity in British India and Mysore, to speak of a Native State nearer home. Travancore ranks next to Mysore in point of administrative and political importance. And if the Diwan of Mysore can be helped, as he is, by a Council, we do not see any reason why a similar body cannot be created in Travancore where the exigencies are as pressing as they were in Mysore. If Travancore is to be considered in relation to any of these points, the opinion would decidedly be that some arrangement must be adopted in the State to relieve the Diwan of his official pressure which he has to bear under an antiquated system. . . . . An Executive Council, while assisting the Diwan materially in the discharge of his administrative functions, has the advantage of being a popular body which will necessarily be in touch with the aspirations and the wants of the people. To say that the deficiency caused by the absence of this body is supplied both by the Popular Assembly and the Legislative Council, is to deny the utility and importance of an executive body. This point may be emphasized by the fact that, though there are a Representative Assembly and a Legislative Council in Mysore, the need of an executive body has been practically recognised by its creation. . . . . Apart from the usefulness and the intrinsic value of an executive body, there is another point which has to be considered as being equally important. The cry all along in Travancore has been in regard to the absence of a continuity of policy. In virtue of a time-honoured custom Travancore has been a happy hunting ground for amateur administrators or for those who were craving for administrative distinction to be acquired at the expense of Travancore. With the change of a Diwan, most of whom were imported from the British service every five years, a continuity in policy could not be successfully maintained with the unfortunate result that at the expiry of every five years Travancore undergoes an administrative upheaval which scarcely contributes to the efficiency of its administration. A foreign Diwan comes not so much for the purpose, as it should be, to promote the welfare of the people or raise the tone of the State administration, as for gaining a clap trap reputation in order to make his official position in the British Service more comfortable and lucrative. . . . . Such, in brief, has been the State of Travancore under foreign Diwanship, and let us hope that, with the disconnection of Mr. Rajagopala Achari, this importation nuisance with its concomunittant evils, has ended."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Prospects of a popular upheaval in Mysore.
The representative assembly—A power or a plaything ?

20. In a leader under this heading, the Karnataka, of the 4th October, has the following:—"It is sometimes said that Mysore is a Swaraj State, and that there are no two elements here to occasion a conflict of interests. A more idle and misleading doctrine was never formulated. Considered racially, Mysore has, it is true, a full measure of Swaraj;—that is to say, its governing class and the governed population are both children of the same soil. But considering the question from the people's point of view, the Government here is scarcely less bureaucratic than in Bombay or Madras. Only our officialdom is covered with an Indian skin, which, in one respect at least, operates as a distinct disadvantage inasmuch as we are not so free as our brethren in British India are to criticize and censure."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

The hardships suffered by the Indians in South Africa.

21. The Swadesamitran, of the 30th September, reproduces from the Indian Opinion in South Africa the details of a case in which the son of an Indian merchant, who has permanently settled in that colony, was not only prevented from entering it, but also arrested thrice and kept in confinement for not having proved his legitimacy, in spite of the facts that he had a certificate from a District Magistrate in India testifying to his legitimacy and that he was acquitted by the colonial courts every time he was put on his trial, and says:—When a compromise was effected between the Indians and the Colonials in South Africa, an assurance was given that a certificate by a Magistrate in India regarding the legitimacy of a person should be taken to be conclusive evidence of the same by the colonial officials. The Immigration Appeal Board has also consented to treat this in the same manner. Even when the law is on the side of the Indians, what is the meaning of their being subjected to unnecessary hardships; Mr. Quins is at the bottom of the whole mischief. We hope our Government will insist on the Colonial Government removing this official, whose conduct tends to create a feeling of hatred against that Government in the minds of the Indians at a time when every attempt is being made to establish a friendly feeling between the Indians and the Colonials.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The South African problem.

22. In an article under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th September, condemns the attitude of the Emigration officers who, the paper states, repeatedly prosecuted one Kesava Prabhu, who had been twice acquitted under the same charge, and makes the following remarks:—Though a settlement was made so far back as in 1914, it is regrettable that the Emigration officers should still continue to act as they pleased. . . . . It is strange that they should so far press their repressive policy, despite the decisions of two of their courts. It is a hopeful sign that the courts have been inclined to the side of justice. All the same the struggle is a source of annoyance to the countrymen of Kesava Prabhu who is still in jail. It is essential that adequate steps should be taken to see that a due warning is given by the Supreme Government of South Africa to the Emigration officers. It remains to be seen whether Lord Chelmsford would take interest in this problem, acting in the footsteps of Lord Hardinge.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The Sumatra revolt.

23. Referring to the disturbances at Sumatra, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 29th September, writes:—The Dutch forces available on the spot are inadequate. Holland is unable to despatch any reinforcements at this juncture. Owing to the European war every State has to be constantly on the defence. It is deplorable that a rebellion should have taken place at such a critical moment as this. A ruling power should always be just and affectionately disposed towards its subjects. When this is not so, in normal times the people will remain law-abiding and in a crisis like this they will rebel. The world is always full of revolutionary changes in family circles as well as in the Governments of States. We cannot help regretting that the Dutch gave room for such revolutionary attempts.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Sept. 30th, 1916.

India after the war.

24. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th September, in its English columns, observes:—"Mr. Henry, Bishop of Madras, contributed an article under the title of 'India after the war' to the August number of the Nineteenth Century and After. He shows in the article how India has been taking a direct part in the war, how Indian blood is being freely shed, how Indian treasure is being lavishly spent towards the success of the British arms, and how all these sacrifices on the part of India are bound after the war to lead to the extension of self-government to India. . . . . More farsighted and statesmanlike utterances have never been made by any sincere friend of the British Government. India and Britain must swim or sink together. We have great faith in the wisdom of the British Government, and we have no doubt that, after the war, a policy such as the one outlined by Mr. Henry of Madras will be adopted to the glory of the British Empire."

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Sept. 30th, 1916.

25. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 30th September, writes:—These two years Roumania has been hesitating to join the Allies. Her aim was not that she should help the conclusion of peace, or help any State to regain its lost territory, or help the vindication of justice, but help herself, by taking advantage of the present struggle to extend her territory. She has been asking both parties as to how she was going to benefit by her intervention. Russia promised to help her to gain fresh territory and also to restore Besarabia and certain other tracts which were rightly her due. The Allies promised her more than Germany and Austria. Roumania next began to ask herself which side was more likely to win ultimately in case she joined, and finally threw in her lot with the Allies; and events now are taking a turn exactly as she anticipated. It is these same motives that prompted Bulgaria to join the enemy and Macedonia, Albania, Montenegro were all taken. Bulgaria's wishes, too, had been fulfilled in like manner. Man proposes but God disposes. The tide of events seemed at first favourable to Bulgaria; it is now about to turn against her. She is now in a fix and is unable to determine her policy for the future. Attempts are being made to pay her back in her own coin. She too is displaying great heroism. The result cannot be foretold. It is surmised that she might try to conclude peace with the Allies as soon as she realises their superiority. But it is too early to make these conjectures. Greece too is in a critical condition. She may, on the whole, be taken to be on the side of the Allies. Crete is on the Allies' side. We may expect a huge revolution in the Balkan States before long.

The war and the Balkan States.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Sept. 29th, 1916.

26. The Yogakshemam, of the 29th September, approves of the order of the Ceylon Government, making it penal to carry on money-lending business without a license, and advocates the passing of a similar law in India.

A license for money-lending.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

27. Referring to the law, proposed to be passed by the Ceylon Government on the subject of money-lending, the Keralodayam, of the 3rd October, dwells upon the necessity of passing a similar measure in India, and observes that it is the duty of the Government to see that innocent people, who execute pro-notes without receiving any consideration, are saved from the consequences, arising from their thoughtless action.

The law regulating money-lending in Ceylon.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

28. The Keralodayam, of the 3rd October, points out that, from the arrest of one Kesava Prabhu, aged 14 years, who accompanied his father to South Africa, and the subsequent proceedings against him, it is to be thought that the South African trouble is not, as was believed, at an end, regrets that the white men in that country, which forms a part of His Majesty's dominions, should still feel bold enough to behave like this towards Indians, and hopes that the leaders of the people would bring such cases to the notice of the British Ministers, and that Lord Chelmsford will not forget that the Government of India too have certain responsibilities in this matter.

The Indians in South Africa.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras. Sept. 25th, 1916.

29. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 25th September, referring to the note sent by Greece to Germany, says that Greece has now begun to realise that she had committed a great blunder for not having thrown in her lot with the Allies against Germany. It is not too late for Greece to join the Allies and save herself from loss. It is not understood what the enlightened statesmen of Greece are thinking about losing such a golden opportunity.

A note by Greece to Germany.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Sept. 26th, 1916.

Revolution in Crete.

30. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 26th September, referring to the present revolution in Crete, says that for several years dissensions have been going on between the Greeks and Turks and Christians and Muhammadans of that place. But the present revolution is not in the interest of Turkey. It is clear that Mr. Venezelos, who is a native of Crete, took an important part in the revolution of 1896.

But as Greece did not change her neutral position contrary to the will of Mr. Venezelos she is now obliged to repent for it. For the people of Crete are heart and soul in favour of the Allies and further are anxious to gain their independence.

These incidents prove the correctness of the predictions that Greece had to suffer many difficulties for not having joined the Allies. If the ruler of Greece, her ministry and nation are concerned about the interests and welfare of their country, they have no alternative but to join the Allies forthwith and take up arms in defence of the innocent and for the maintenance of the independence of small States and for saving themselves from the clutches of a cruel and bloodthirsty foe.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Police.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Sept. 30th, 1916.

The Police administration.

31. In commenting upon the report of last year's administration of the Police department, the Kerala Patrika, of the 30th September, points out that respectable men do not enter the department, because, in addition to the smallness of the salary, the higher officers, most of whom have risen to their positions from the lower grades, or have little knowledge of the people and their customs, do not behave properly towards their subordinates, but hopes that the department will gradually improve in its tone as a result of the recent reforms, and that, instead of hating and fearing the police, respectable people will co-operate with them, which, however, would be rendered possible, only if the department contains a large number of honest and respectable persons.

BHARATA KESARI, Trivandrum, Sept. 27th, 1916.

The police and handcuffs.

32. The Bharata Kesari, of the 27th September, thinks that handcuffing should be rarely resorted to, especially in the case of respectable people, and that too only after a person has been found guilty, and hopes that the prayer of the Nattukotta Chetties of Devakota regarding this matter would be granted by the Government.

(b) Courts.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sept. 27th, 1916.

Criminal courts.

33. In reviewing the work of the Criminal Courts in this Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 27th September, welcomes the decision of the Government to introduce the "Village Panchayats Bill" with a view to starting more Village Panchayat Courts with increased powers, and notes with satisfaction that the Governor in Council intends to pass a "Children Act" so as to avoid juvenile offenders being sent to jail. It, however, draws attention to the inconvenience and hardship of the witnesses attending the Courts of Deputy Magistrates and Sub-Magistrates, and to the objectionable practice of their being summoned to appear before these officers even when they are on circuit.

(d) Education.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

Necessary reforms in the system of education.

34. Referring to the hue and cry raised in England that the whole system of education in that country should be reformed after the war, the Prapanchamitran, of the 29th September, observes:—If in the advanced country of England itself a thorough reformation of the system of education is found necessary, need we lay stress on the necessity of such a reformation in India? A committee consisting of representatives of educational institutions in England was recently appointed to ascertain public opinion regarding the lines on which the system of education should be reformed, with special reference to the attention to be paid in elementary schools themselves to the development of a spirit of unity and self-control among the boys and to the improvement of their physique. When the people in England are anxious that these two points should be especially attended to in schools, how can we in India ignore them? But the system of education now obtaining in India is quite contrary to that followed in England, at least in regard to these two points. The educational authorities here are very careful in preventing our boys from having any idea of unity citizenship or self-control. Our schools and colleges are not managed by popular representatives, but are subject to the control of Government officials, and it is therefore a spirit of submission to authority that is appreciated in these schools and colleges. The teachers have no idea of respect begotten of love and deem the students to be slaves and themselves to be their sole masters. At times they treat the students most cruelly. This makes the latter lose all spirit of manliness and become timid. But it is these students that form the basis of the communal structure. How can they justify their position, unless they are taught the main principles of unity and citizenship and trained to have self-control from their school days? As for the physique of our young men, we should be ashamed to speak of it. The poverty of our boys accounts in a way for their poor health. So it is the duty of the Government to see that the system of education in this country is reformed soon, with special reference to the two points referred to above.

National education.

35. In an article under this heading, a correspondent to the Desamata, of the 27th September, makes the following remarks:—The present system of education in this country, destroys patriotism, a desire to serve one's society and country, national life, the amelioration of life, purity of heart, saintly character, and other things. It brings affliction to boys. It fosters discord between the teacher and the taught. It stamps out the mother-tongue and the history of the mother country. It does not tolerate Swadeshism. It undermines health. It is destructive of morality and of the fear of sin. It makes one forget his mother country. It leaves one in want of bread after one has sold away his lands and fields. Hundreds of hands have been turned out for Government service; but there are none who possess the scientific knowledge and industrial skill that is required for the country.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Sept. 27th, 1916.

Educational reforms in England and India.

36. In a leader under this heading, the Desamata, of the 27th September, has the following remarks:—There is a world of difference between education in England and that in India. The leading men in England declare that there must be an improvement in school education, in respect of social life, self-government and citizenship. Self-government may not be mentioned in connection with our schools; social life and citizenship cannot be thought of. These are all gall and wormwood to the Educational officers in this country. . . . . The system of education obtaining in our country is defective in so many ways. Lala Lajput Rai once remarked, "If Japan is quarter of a century behind Europe in the matter of education, we are half a century behind Japan". . . . . Europeans that cannot understand the Indian heart come out as great educationists, and they sometimes blunder. . . . . India stands in need of greater reform in the matter of education than England. The Government should in future take greater interest in the education of this land, and introduce changes and reforms in the educational system; but will they do so?

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Sept. 27th, 1916.

The educational policy of the Government of India.

37. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th September, in a leader under this heading while commending the delegation of elementary education to local bodies, condemns, as obstructive to the progress of education, the powers conferred on Collectors to interfere with curricula arranged and text-books prescribed when considerations other than educationol call for such an interference. The paper remarks that such powers are not only superfluous, but will also defeat the very object with which the control over elementary education is made over to local bodies.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

In a leader of the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th September, on the same subject continued, the paper remarks:—It will be evident from the Educational memorandum of the Government of India that whatever may be their reasons for such a course, the Government intend to reserve for themselves the control over secondary and collegiate education. The Commissioners and Collectors are constituted as controlling authorities over such education, with the Educational officers at their back to advise them.

* * * * *

If more evidence is wanted about this changed angle of vision of the Government of India with regard to education we have to turn to the Legislative Council, and observe the policy underlying the constitution of the Patna University. . . . . It is said that the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri had an idea to introduce a Bill to remove some disabilities under which the Universities have been labouring under the Universities Act of 1904, but that he gave up the idea, seeing that the Patna University scheme only strengthens Lord Curzon's Act of 1904. To alternate the liberal policy in the case of elementary education with a narrow one in the matter of higher education is to give the people a sweet and a bitter thing to swallow in succession; and this is not proper. We hope that the Government of India will reconsider this question, and come to a more liberal decision, such as will give the Local Governments a broad outlook of matters. We trust that the Hon'ble Sir C. Sankaran Nayar will help the Government to take a liberal view, and that the Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri will not give up his question in despondency, but will try to bring it to a full discussion in the Council.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The Lalgudi exhibition.

38. In an article under the heading "Mere Noise", the Swadeshabhimani, of the 29th September, referring to the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar's opening address at the Lalgudi exhibition says:—Sir Sivaswami Ayyar congratulated the teachers on having succeeded in raising subscriptions to the extent of Rs. 400. We are however disposed to think that this burden of supplying funds should more appropriately have fallen on the shoulders of those for whose benefit the exhibition was primarily organised, namely, of the parents of the children of these schools. Sir Sivaswami Ayyar remarked that our children were only clever in the habit of cramming and took no pains to develope their powers of observation. When he has himself openly confessed that the chief characteristic of our educated people is to exhibit their learning by dilating upon some dry subject, we have no need to discuss the point further. To the question, however, as to how the teachers with a monthly grant of Rs. 3-8-0 can be expected to provide for the school museum, school garden and manual training, Sir Sivaswami Ayyar's reply is that the subject will receive the attention of the Government when more funds become available. It follows therefore that until that happy time arrives, the efforts of the teachers in this direction will be unavailing. How can a teacher who has not even the income of a peon be expected to provide all these facilities? Further, most of our schools are under private management. The local boards and municipalities, being too poor to support these schools themselves, annually receive aid from Government. We fail to make out therefore what was intended by the remark that these local bodies should help the Teachers' Associations with funds. When the Government themselves are said to be unable to take up this work for want of funds, how can the local boards be expected to help? Knowing, as we do, what low pay or grant the poverty-stricken school-master gets at present, it is useless to blame him for not turning the attention of the children to nature study. Our educational policy is still based on the same ideals which were first formed when the British were establishing their supremacy in this country. So long as the Universities are producing only scribes able to do correspondence work in English, how can we expect any among us who are capable of helping nature study? We should be saying an unpleasant truth, if we remark that under the present dearth of funds, these exhibitions and lectures can do no more than mere noise. If it is believed that the merits and demerits of the numerous exhibits received from hundreds of schools can be fully explained to these elementary school-masters in one or two weeks, the teachers of Trichinopoly must be of a better order of intellect than any that we know of among teachers generally. In short, we must observe that it is useless to seek to give a teacher instruction through lectures of this kind, unless his status is first raised. We cannot help pitying the condition of the ignorant school-masters who are led away by the noise made by the inspecting officers who act like the clever milkman who carries a dead calf on his head and makes a bellowing sound to induce its innocent mother to follow him.

39. In comparing the ancient and modern systems of education in India, the Malayali, of the 27th September, points out that, while the former created love and respect in the minds of the taught towards their teachers, the latter tends to make them disobedient and insolent, and observes that the treatment of the students by the teachers, as if the former were menials, the prescribing of difficult text-books, increasing the difficulty of passing examinations, undue enhancement of school-fees, absence of means by which the students could gain knowledge of things essential to them during life, engendering a tendency to imitate the western people in everything, etc., etc, are some of the chief causes to which the want of respect on the part of the students towards their teachers, and their inability to distinguish between liberty and impudence, may be attributed.

India and the present system of education

MALAYALI, Quilon, Sept. 27th, 1916.

(e) Local and Municipal.

40. In an article under this heading the Andhrapatrika, of the 29th September, observes :—The order of the Local Government issued to the Collectors to see that the official members of municipal councils do not fail to attend meetings of the councils, except when they happen to be out of the municipal stations is, in our opinion, unnecessary. It is also unnecessary that officials should, any longer, be members of councils. The appointment of official members to seats in the councils was originally meant to train people to self-government. It was intended to last till the people should appreciate and take an active interest in self-government, but not to go on for ever. . . . . The need is past. The number of official members has decreased. Their zeal has cooled down and their duties have multiplied. People have been taking an increasing interest in matters of local self-government, and form a majority on the councils. . . . . Under these circumstances it is the duty of the rulers to allow the representatives of people to take the place of official members. This will give greater training to them and conduce to their progress. The policy of allowing people to have the blessing of liberty by dribblets, even after they have become fit for it, will be a source of needless discontent. We wish that the rulers will note this fact at the present juncture.

Municipalities and official members.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

41. Referring to the recent raising of the taxes on many houses in this municipality, and the orders issued for the collection, subject to appeal, before the expiry of this month, of the increased taxes, the Andhraprakasika, of the 27th September, recommends the postponement of the collection to April 1917, and says:—As the Act does not allow the President to take the initiative in this matter, it is desirable that a representation signed by ten Commissioners should be sent to him. In the special meeting in which the aforesaid representation may be taken up for consideration, the representatives of the people should advocate and secure a postponement of the collection. The rate-payers will do well to approach such of the Commissioners as are easily accessible, and represent to them their grievance The representaion is sure to receive a sympathetic response from all to whom it may be addressed, since everyone sees that the collection of taxes, by the exercise of authority and oppression, is to be condemned.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

The system of reserving compartments for Europeans and Eurasians in railways in India.

42. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th September, expresses its surprise at the statement made on the side of the Government at the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council that there was nothing illegal in the railway companies reserving separate compartments for Europeans and Eurasians, and observes: It is a principle admitted in every civilised country that a permanent institution established for the purpose of carrying passengers and goods by land or sea should abide by certain wholesome regulations in the interests of the public, for example (1) that they should not allow overcrowding of passengers or goods and (2) that they should not raise the scale of charges at their will. No one can deny the necessity for such regulations, and railway and shipping companies throughout the world have framed exhaustive rules on these matters. Moreover, in India, the railways are either owned by the Government or the Government is the largest shareholder in the companies that run them, and the Government is also bound to protect the interests of the people, being the guardian of their welfare. Therefore the Government in India can frame stricter rules to safeguard the interests of the people than the Government in England, where the Railways are owned and managed wholly by private capitalists. Even if the Government has not done so, we have to point out that it should insist on the railway companies in India impartially acting on the salutary principle enunciated above in managing the railways. This principle is clearly laid down in section 42 of the Indian Railways Act of 1890, which states in so many words that a railway administration shall not make or give any undue preference or advantage to any particular class of persons or subject any particular class of persons to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage. Reserving a portion of a train for Europeans and Eurasians clearly amounts to giving undue preference to one class of persons which the railway companies are not permitted to do under the Act. We do not deny that the Act empowers these companies to set apart separate accommodation in trains for particular classes of persons and it is in exercise of this power that separate compartments are provided for women. This is a most desirable arrangement, as women in India do not mix with men so freely as in other countries. But we do not think that the railway companies are justified in exercising this power in such a manner as to afford special conveniences to one class of people and curtail the conveniences of another class. It was stated at the last meeting of the Legislative Council that it was only in the interests of both Indians and the Europeans that the railway companies were adopting the system of reserving separate compartments for Europeans and Eurasians and that, as there was a difference between Indians and Europeans or Eurasians in the matter of food, etc., the two communities would do well to sit separately. If this is the true reason why compartments are reserved for Europeans and Eurasians, why has not the same system been followed in the case of Hindus and Muhammadans? Why have not gosha women been provided with separate accommodation? We do not even object to particular classes of persons being given special privileges. But our contention is that no class of people should enjoy a privilege at the cost of another. When the Indians are huddled together in a train like cattle, how will the railway company be justified in allowing a few Europeans and Eurasians comfortably to sleep in a big compartment? When the other compartments are full and several Indians have purchased tickets and find no room in those compartments, how will the companies be justified in preventing them from getting into the compartments reserved for Europeans and Eurasians, which are almost empty? So the only question to be decided is whether, when the train is otherwise full and there is room in the reserved compartments, the Indians can get into these compartments or not. We hope the railway administrations in this country will allay unnecessary excitement among the Indian public by giving an affirmative answer to this question.

The system of reserving compartments for Europeans and Eurasians in Railways in India.

The Lokopakari, of the 2nd October, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran, of the 28th September, under this heading and adds:—The statement by the Government that there is nothing illegal in the reservation by the railway companies of compartments for Europeans and Eurasians will give room to an impression in the minds of the people that the rulers are partial to these classes; because they follow the same religion as themselves and this is not at all desirable.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Oct. 2nd, 1916.

The deputation of Mr. Todhunter.

43. Referring to a communiqué issued by the Government of India regarding the scope of this deputation, in which it is stated that the object of the Government in deputing Mr. Todhunter was to obtain materials from a study of the conditions under which Indian labour is working in those Colonies for consideration in connection with the abolition of indentured labour which has shortly to come under discussion in London, the Swadesamitran, of the 29th September, says:—We are afraid that this communiqué, which is said to have been issued in order to avoid a misunderstanding regarding the deputation of Mr. Todhunter, has raised many doubts. Materials have already been gathered in the time of Lord Hardinge for abolishing the system of indentured labour. What is, therefore, the necessity for an enquiry being made in countries in which this system is not in force and how can an enquiry about the conditions under which free emigrants live furnish fresh materials for helping the abolition of the indentured labour system? We have often been complaining that free emigrants are subjected to the same kinds of hardships as indentured emigrants and importuned the Government to take steps to remove these hardships. It was stated by Lord Chelmsford some days back that, when the question of the abolition of the system of indentured labour was taken up for consideration, the question of remedying the grievances of the free emigrants would also be considered. If the deputation of Mr. Todhunter is in pursuance of this statement, we would welcome it. But the Government communiqué says that he is sent for the purpose of understanding the condition of free emigrants so as to help the Government in deciding the question of abolishing the indentured labour system. Thus in trying to remove one misunderstanding, the Government has raised other doubts. Why cannot it be plain in this matter?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The deputation of Mr. Chadwick

44. The Swadesamitran, of the 3rd October, writes:—We learn that after finishing his work in Russia, Mr. Chadwick will proceed to France to ascertain the facilities for improving the trade of this country with India. So the work of Mr. Chadwick seems to be growing and it is to be noted that the expenditure incurred by the deputation led by him is borne by the Government of India. One curious point in connection with the visit of Mr. Chadwick to France is that the British Chamber of Commerce in France, at whose request he is proceeding to France, wanted experienced merchants to accompany him and that the Government of India stated in reply that it would be difficult to get experienced merchants to undertake this duty. But, at the same time, the Bengal Government was informed that, if merchants in Bengal wished to join the deputation, they could do so at their own expense It is really regrettable that in adopting measures with a view to improve the trade of this country, the Government should act as it likes, without taking the leaders of the people into its confidence. What is the meaning of the Government taking any step in the interests of the public, without consulting them? Considering the schemes that are being worked out in different countries for the purpose of improving trade after the war, what are we to say about the efforts that are being made in this direction by the Government in India?

45. The Andhraprakasika, of the 27th September, views with regret the "unsatisfactory" replies which the Government give to some of the interpellations of the elected members, and cites as instances those of the Supreme Government to some of the interpellations of the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma in the recent meeting of the Supreme Council.

The paper remarks that an Indian officer is to be preferred to an Anglo-Indian officer, to represent the Indian interests in the conference that is going to assemble next year at London to discuss the question of Emigrant coolies, since an Indian officer is more conversant with the condition of the Indians.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

Devasthanams.

46. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th September, publishes an appeal to pleaders, requesting them to shake off their indifference and serve their country by taking active part to see Devasthanam properties brought under the management of properly-constituted trustees with the help of courts. He concludes the appeal with an exhortation to the retired officers in the following terms:– "Such of our officers as retire on pensions should surely believe that they would be serving their country better by devoting themselves to the cause of the Devasthanams, and establishing, in every district, branches of the Dharma-Rakshana Sabha of Madras, than by submitting again, as honorary Magistrates and Deputy Collectors, to the yoke of the slavish life which they have once shaken off."

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

Curious methods.

47. In a leaderette under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th September, surveys briefly the details of the litigation of the Jay Maharaj with which Mr. Tilak has been closely connected, and makes the following comments:— How far men in power strive to place their opponents in difficulties will be evident from the treatment accorded to Mr. Tilak by the Government officers in Bombay. . . . . Despite the decision of the Privy Council, Mr. Tilak has not been able to obtain justice for his ward. . . . . His representations have been consigned to the waste paper basket, and he was compelled to have a lawyer's notice served upon the Government. . . . . We are at a loss to know whether Mr. Tilak's opponents have been bringing their influence to bear upon Government officers to see that the time of Mr. Tilak is wholly wasted on litigation. It is to be desired that the Bombay Government would save Mr. Tilak from needless worry.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

Co-operative movements in Mysore.

48. In a leader under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd October, contrasts the co-operative movement carried on in Mysore with that in the Madras Presidency and observes:—Many restraints are imposed on the working of the movement in the Madras Presidency, while, in Mysore, the movement has unfettered progress, with the result that the number of societies in Mysore, viewed in proportion to population, is more than three times that in the Madras Presidency. . . . . The people of the Madras Presidency and the leaders of the movement therein, have to bear in mind that what is possible for the Indians in Mysore must also be possible for those in the Madras Presidency provided equal facilities are afforded, and that the affording of facilities rests with the rulers and the leaders.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

What India wants.

49. In an article under this heading, the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd October, observes:—An Englishman who was under the wrong impression that India is demanding only protective tariffs, contributed an elaborate article to the New Statesman expatiating over the evils of protection. . . . . We declare that there are no Indian leaders who look upon protection as the sole means for the economic regeneration of India, unmindful of the evils of protection, though we admit that the right of protection is included among the fiscal privileges which we demand. . . . . In fact England had to resort to protection when she had to come out triumphant in her competition with India in the 18th century; she is still having recourse to it, in a way, by imposing inland duties to protect her Lancashire cotton goods. Most of the civilised countries on the face of the earth such as Erance, Germany and even Canada seek refuge under protection. It is strange to say that a system that is useful for Canada is not useful for India. There are a good many other means, besides, that may be adopted in view of the commercial and industrial development of a country, of which the system of guaranteeing is the least objectionable. . . . . Have we the liberty to introduce the system of guaranteeing? No, not even the Government of India, if they be pleased to give us the benefit of it. . . . . Let alone protective tariffs, bounties, or guarantees. Are loans even given? Are industrial schools and research institutions started on a large scale? Are scholarships at least liberally offered? We find none. . . . . The authority of the Secretary of State for India in the matter of Indian finances must end; the Government of India must have complete fiscal autonomy; and the Legislative Councils must be invested with the power to vote on financial matters.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Appointment of a Member of the Board of Revenue.

50. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th October, has a leader proposing that an Indian should be appointed in the place vacated by the Hon'ble Mr. H. F. W. Gillman, in which it states that, when a similar proposal was previously made in the Legislative Council by Diwan Bahadur R. Raghunatha Rao, Sir Murray Hammick declared that there could be no objection to the appointment of an Indian as a member of the Board. The leader concludes with: "The Government of Madras should, without fail, on this occasion, appoint an Indian to the membership, if only to make good the promise of Sir Murray Hammick. We trust that this point will be noted."

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Indukurpet hospital.

51. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 4th October, writes under this heading:—The present officer in charge of the hospital has made himself very unpopular with the result that the daily attendance of patients has fallen from 110 or 120 to 10 or 15. On the representation of the people, the Tahsildar of Nellore was deputed by the taluk board to enquire into the matter and send a report. The Tahsildar sent a report recommending a transfer of the officer, and the taluk board resolved so far back as on the 22nd of July, that he should be transferred. The Collector has not issued final orders, though three months have elapsed since.

The paper has a note to the effect that the matter is being brought to the notice of the Surgeon-General.

CHOWDARI, Chataparru (Kistna), Aug. 1916.

"The world-esteemed B. G. Tilak."

52. The Chowdari, of August, received on the 3rd October, has an article under this heading in its editorial columns, in which it expresses its disapprobation of the action taken by the Governments of Bombay and Madras against Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Annie Besant and advises Lord Willingdon to revoke his orders issued against Mr. Tilak and Mrs. Besant, and "earn spotless fame."

CHOWDARI, Chataparru (Kistna), Aug. 1916.

The Home Rule League.

53. The Chowdari, of August, in an article on this subject, extracts the following from the last issue of the Bombay Chronicle: "It will no doubt interest some of those who have been so shocked at certain recent publications to hear that Mr. Dadabhoy is more convinced than ever of the soundness of the 'drain' theory and the persistence of the trouble of the doctrines laid down by him in his well known work 'Poverty and Un-British Rule in India' published 15 years ago. And he remains emphatically convinced that self-government is the only remedy."

The journal states that many leading persons such as Rabindranath Tagore and Sir P. Mehta were in favour of the demand for "swaraj," and is at a loss to know why papers and leaders that advocate the cause are considered seditionists.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Sept. 29th, 1916.

Administrative divisions on the language basis.

54. In a leading article dwelling on the importance of dividing the country into various provinces with reference to its principal vernaculars, and of placing all the districts having a particular vernacular under the same provincial Government, as a means of promoting national unity, by creating common interests, aims and aspirations, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 29th September, observes that this question of dividing the country on the language basis is an off-shoot, as it were, of the problems raised by the Home Rule propaganda, and that the existing condition of the Canarese-speaking people who are now under three different provinces, namely, Madras, Coorg and Bombay, affords one of the best examples of the defects of the present system of grouping districts of the same vernacular under different provincial Governments. The paper concludes as follows:—The text-books and the course of vernacular study prescribed by the educational authorities of Bombay have little in common with those prescribed in our province. The same divergence is to be seen in the matter of political interests too. One instance of this may be seen in the different systems of the forest administration in North and South Canara districts. The only means of removing these defects is by grouping together districts of the same vernacular under the same province. No one can deny the importance of this subject which has been urged on the attention of the public by the Masulipatam branch of the Home Rule League. If it should be discussed by the Canarese-speaking people with reference to their own needs in this direction, the movement might take a definite shape. Even if Mysore should stand aloof, the Canarese press of Dharwar, Bijapur, Belgaum and Bellary ought to arouse popular interest in the subject and force on the attention of the Canarese-speaking people the advantages of forming a kannada province and thus gain their support to the movement. May we not expect that the Canarese-speaking people will organise a branch of the Home Rule League at least with this object in view?

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sept. 27th, 1916.

The arrest in Bengal.

55. Referring to the arrest and internment of suspects in Bengal under the "Defence of India Act", and to the repudiation by Lord Carmichael of the charges that they were not being properly treated, and that they used to be interned without any explanation being taken from them, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 27th September, fails to understand why the "Defence of India Act" should be applied in their cases, inasmuch as the Penal Code would be sufficient to deal with murders, dacoities, etc., with which they were generally charged, but concludes with an expression of regret that a number of Police officers in Bengal should have been murdered during the last ten years.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Sept. 27th, 1916.

Sir S. P. Sinha.

56. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 27th September, pooh-poohs the contention of certain papers, like New India, that it would be beneath the dignity of Sir S. P. Sinha, who was once a Member of the Viceroy's Executive Council, to accept the membership of the Bengal Executive Council, and observes that, as the presence of a person like Sir Sinha in the Executive Council in Bengal would, in the present circumstances, be of great advantage to the country, he should be congratulated on the patriotic step he has taken.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 26th 1916.

A university for Kerala.

57. The Manorama, of the 26th September, pleads for the establishment of a University for the country of Kerala, and hopes that His Highnes the Maharaja of Travancore and the Diwan will pay adequate attention to the matter.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 26th, 1916.

A special grievance of the Registration department.

58. The Manorama, of the 26th September, condemns the action of the District Registrar of Calicut in demanding work from all his subordinates on the last Avani Avittam day, which was a gazetted holiday, and calls upon the members of the Legislative Council to draw the attention of the Government to the matter.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Sept. 26th, 1916.

The Madras Sanitary Board.

59. The Manorama, of the 26th September, points out that the Madras Sanitary Board consists only of three members and these too officials while such Boards in other presidencies have a larger number of members, composed of officials and non-officials, and hopes that the question of appointing non-official members to it and making it useful to the people, will receive the attention of the authorities concerned.

60. The Keralodayam, of the 3rd October, welcomes the election of the Hon'ble Mr. Muzumdar as the President of the next Congress, and observes that, though Mrs. Besant has done and is still doing much for India, her election to that place at this juncture is likely to launch the Congress into trouble.

The next Congress.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

61. In a note the Lokaprakasam, of the 2nd October, writes:—It is said that there is something in the non-publication of the object of the "Chiefs' Conference" at Delhi and in the rumour that the Nizam, the Gaekwar, and the Maharajas of Mysore and Travancore do not propose to attend it.

The Chiefs' Conference at Delhi.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Oct. 2nd, 1916.

62. The Qaumi Report, of the 27th September, writes:—Alas! Mussalmans! Time was when the whole world took us as their example in architecture, medicine and learning and even now the remains of our ancient buildings are to be found in Spain, Mesopotamia and Persia. Europe still acts on the principles of our medical science. The art of surgery, of which Europe is justly proud to-day was first invented by us. It was we who had open the way for foreign trade. Who can repudiate the zeal and determination of those Mussalmans? Although their monuments have been, or are being, effaced yet their name still lives amidst all this ruin. Is it really true that we are the descendants of those Mussalmans? If so, it were better, had our mothers never been born. We have not sense enough to threadle a needle. These science and arts which were the pride of our ancestors have been either lost or ignored by us until they are all forgotten. We see the remains of ancient buildings and samples of old books, but all that we know about them is that they are the memorials of our ancestors. We care not in whose possession this inheritance is. We get hundreds of Arabic books published in England, France and Germany and thousands of European savants are, even at the present moment, engaged in research work on the literary and architectural achievements of our ancestors. If these men were to close down their presses and break their press, it is probable that in the course of this century the very name of Mussalman would cease to exist.

"Our future hopes."

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 27th, 1916.

We have entrusted the sacred bones of our ancestors to others who are deriving benefit from their excellence. On the one hand caravanseries, tombs and mosques are mortgaged to Hindus and on the other, our very existence is in the hands of Europe. Such is our dependence and, in the spirit of this ambition, do we entertain our future hopes. Even this is not based on our personal strength, but on the condition of copartnership.

A story is told that a fox made peace with a lion on condition that he was to get what was left over of any game the former chanced to catch.

The wretched fox thought this partnership was a proof of his strength and an evidence of his success.

To-day we, Mussalmans, too can only hope that we may not be altogether disappointed on this principle, and only on this principle, of partnership.

We have erroneously regarded partnership as concord and unity. We are labouring under the delusion that in the division of the country, "we" and "he" are equal and that we shall have to experience the same difficulties as they do. This I do not deny, but what is the meaning of this that in the joys of the country! our shares are not equal? Are not these things happening before our eyes, and do we not see that we are being deprived of our rights? Why should we ignore this aspect of the question that the country is not the land of our fathers but a conquered land? Although our rule no longer exists still we have certain vested rights in it. The Government is aware of this secret and has recognised our importance from political and historical points of view. An elephant dead or alive is worth something. We cannot forget what we really are. What does it matter if our rule does not exist to-day? If we do not rule to-day we did up to yesterday. There are many nations in the world that have been deprived of their sovereignty like ourselves. But our national greatness cannot be decided from an erroneous angle of vision. Even now our nation and our rule exist in the world. We have not been deprived of soveriguty for ever like the Jews nor are we confined within the four boundaries of a country like the Hindus. Then how is it possible for us to admit that we are a degraded and conquered people in India?

Though we have lost our rule, our honour and our religion remain and so long as the world and its kingdoms live we and our religion live.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 28th, 1916.

"Our future hopes."

The Qaumi Report, of the 28th September, in continuation of its article on this subject in a previous issue, writes:—We can certainly make out distinct claims against the Government, because our condition and our status are alike distinct. The Christian Government are aware of the kind treatment meted out to them by Islam. They know and their national history reminds them of the treatment extended to their fathers by our ancestors. European scholars cannot repudiate Muslim civilization or political power. We have stood by them shoulder to shoulder for years. We eat at their tables and we have no objection to forming alliances with them. Even to-day we believe in their Sacred Book and recognise their Saviour as our Apostle and guide. Our religion is neither narrow nor bigoted. We are ready to lend them a hand at all times and to keep the promise of loyalty we made with them as our rulers. Of this we have already given abundant proof.

But Indians do not show the same kind of treatment as the people of Europe showed to our ancestors. I have already pointed out that although the people of Europe differ from us and are opposed to us in religion, yet they acknowledge our past kindness to them. In spite of thousands of religious and political dissensions the people of Europe are pleased with us. This is the result of the period spent with them in Europe. They were educated in our schools on the same terms as ourselves. We gave them equal rights in our empire and they were accepted as friends and associates.

Look at India nothing but chagrin and disappointment meet the view. What (good) treatment is there that we did not extend to the Hindus? The Emperor Akbar with the sole object of pleasing the Hindus endured thousands of national and moral losses. Similarly, Aurangzeb (Alumgir) and Jahangir spent lakhs of rupees on endowments. They granted States and estates and with the object of extending the bounds of friendship they made endowments of jagirs to Hindu temples which our successors in governing have confirmed and thereby ratified our engagements and honoured our pledged word.

What was the condition of India when we came to this country? Songs are still enthusiastically sung in praise of the culture and civilization alluded to in the Sastras, but this culture and civilization had no relation with the civilization of any other country in the world nor was there anything international about it. They were as ignorant of foreign countries as foreign lands were oblivious of their existence. It was a sin according to their religious code to cross the sea. Hence they knew nothing of the art of navigation. According to their belief the king was supreme and absolute and therefore they maintained no law courts, and judges or magistrates were non-existent in their country.

III.—LEGISLATION.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

The Patna University Bill.

63. Referring to the Patna University Bill, the Keralodayam, of the 3rd October, points out that, inasmuch as the syndicate will, as in other Universities, contain more Europeans than Indians, and as this will lead to troubles similar to what recently occurred in Madras, the vesting of enormous powers in that body is not a desirable thing, and hopes that the objectionable provisions in the Bill will be removed before it is passed into law.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Sept. 29th, 1916.

The Raja of Rāmnād.

64. Under the head of stray notes by one "Narada", the Prapanchamitran, of the 29th September, had the following:—The Dasara festivities will not be held in the zamin of Rāmnād this year, and the reason is the war. Bravo! Raja of Rāmnād! A very nice order indeed! You have not stopped anything else on account of the war. Is this not a festival in which goddess Sakti is worshipped? If you had celebrated the Dasara festivities this year and given an opportunity to thousands of people to enjoy them jubilantly and pray, in all earnestness, for the success of the British in this war, I would welcome you as a true lover of our Government. You have not given up your meal and dress on account of the war. You have not vacated your seat in the Legislative Council on account of it. You have not on that account discarded a letter which was written to you by the Governor of Madras, expressing appreciation of your administration. You have not, on that account, put off your brother's marriage. When you have not given up anything else on account of the war, what has made you stop the festival of Mahasakti alone on this account? Perhaps you may be angry with me for saying this. But how does it affect me? Perhaps you thought of saving the expenditure on this festival! Do not think so. It is a great mistake on your part in having stopped it. What can be done hereafter? Give away the amount, which used to be spent on this festival, immediately to the war fund.

Government aid to a hotel.

65. Referring to an order issued by the Mysore Government proposing to give a loan for the establishment of a hotel in Mysore, on the recommendation of the Trade and Industries section of the Economic Conference, the Mysore Star, of the 1st October, in a leading article condemning the policy underlying the proposal, observes that apart from the fact that a hotel on the lines indicated is scarcely likely to prove a successful concern, it is surprising that the Government should undertake to finance a scheme like this, which would cultivate among the people not only social habits of a new type which are repugnant to orthodox sentiment but also habits of improvidence which are detrimental to their economic progress. The paper also remarks that matters have come to such a pass that no associations or other public bodies in the State, not to speak of several Government offices, can turn out any useful work without being fortified by a plentiful supply of refreshments.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Oct. 1st, 1916.

Dasara festivities in Mysore.

66. In an article under this heading, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 5th October, observes:—It is highly gratifying to note that the various conferences held at Mysore on the occasion of the Dasara festivities afford an excellent opportunity, every year, of bringing popular leaders from all parts of the province into closer touch with the officers of Government and of helping them to exchange views on all matters of public interest. We are glad to see that the co-operative societies were themselves the active organisers of their conference this year. This is a welcome indication of the healthy growth and increasing popularity of the movement. Our only fear is that the societies might prove a means of increasing the evils of improvidence by creating facilities for borrowing at a low rate of interest. We are anxious that the people should never ignore the dread nature of the demon known as Debt, and it will certainly not conduce to the economic progress of the State, if the people should be in a position to borrow easily and lose the money by wasteful expenditure. It is therefore imperative that the societies should always ensure that the money borrowed from them is in every case utilised for some laudable purpose. As regards the work of the Representative Assembly which meets every year on this occasion, we would point out that the benefit of the discussions on the various subjects laid before the assembly would be very much augmented, if the assembly were to restrict the number of subjects and give more time to those actually taken up for discussion. Under the present system, it not infrequently happens that a discussion begun on some very important subject has to be dropped or concluded before any definite result is arrived at, because there are numerous other items crowding the programme. The annual exhibition will doubtless prove instructive to the vast numbers who come to see it from all parts of the province and we hope that the agriculture, trade and industries of Mysore will receive a real impetus through the valuable instruction thus imparted to the people.

VRITTANTA PATRIKE, Mysore, Oct. 5th, 1916.

MALAYALI, Quilon, Sept. 30th, 1916.

Duty on tiles.

67. The Malayali, of the 30th September, regrets that, while imposing heavy taxes on the natives of the soil, the Travancore Darbar should leave untaxed rubber, tea, coffee, etc., which go to enrich the planters, and dwells upon the necessity of levying a duty on the tiles exported from the State.

ALL TRAVANCORE and most of the COCHIN PAPERS.

The birthday celeberations in Travancore and Cochin.

68. All the Travancore and most of the Cochin papers offer their hearty congratulations to His Highness the Maharaja of Travancore on His Highness's 59th birthday, and most of them refer to the progress made by the State during His Highness's administration. All the Cochin and most of the Travancore papers offer similar congratulations to His Highness the Raja of Cochin on His Highness's 58th birthday.

CHAKRAVARTHI, Cochin, Sept. 30th, 1916.

The Cochin Raja's birthday.

69. In offering congratulations to His Highness the Raja of Cochin on His Highness's 58th birthday, the Chakravarthi, of the 30th September, reviews His Highness's two years' administration of the State, in doing which it points out that, though His Highness has managed to maintain the financial equilibrium of the State during these troublous times, little has been done in the matter of increasing the wealth of the country and the prosperity of the people, as is being done in Mysore, Baroda, and other Native States, and even in British India itself, and that it would be regrettable indeed, if the rare opportunity afforded by the war is allowed to slip by. It thinks that it is a disgrace to the Cochin State that she alone of all should be considered unfit by the Suzerain Power to have a representative assembly, for which the ex-Raja tried his level best, though there are similar assemblies in Mysore, Baroda, Travancore, and even in Pudukkottai, and Legislative Councils in British India, and concludes by remarking that the proposed extension of the Forest Tramway, whether it may be profitable or not, is now known to be due to, and for the benefit of, the European planters.

LIST OF NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS PUBLISHED IN THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY, THE NATIVE STATES OF HYDERABAD, MYSORE, TRAVANCORE, COCHIN AND PUDUKKOTTAI, AND THE FRENCH TERRITORIES OF PONDICHERRY AND KARIKAL.

[NOTE.—Among the Indian-owned newspapers, those classed as dealing with politics are printed in big type. II.—Home Administration.

Judicial and Executive functions.

1. The following appears in New India of the 7th October: —"'The Inspector-General is undoubtedly correct in his belief that a still more rigorous application (of the Criminal Procedure Code) would materially contribute towards the prevention of crime, and his action in impressing his conviction on district officers is approved.' This passage occurs in the Government Review of the Punjab Police Administration Report. The District officers have to decide cases in their judicial capacity, and it is difficult to understand the propriety of the Inspector-General of Police attempting to 'impress his conviction on District officers' in regard to a rigorous application of the law. It is rather difficult, we are afraid, to mark the line of demarcation between 'impressing his conviction' and forcing his views on District officers. Whatever may have been the extent or the degree of influence of the Inspector-General on the officers concerned, it seems to be really an objectionable proceeding, to which, we regret to notice, the Punjab Government have given their approval. Surely this is a glaring instance of the evils of the present judicial executive system of administration."

New India, Madras, Oct. 7th, 1916.

The C.I D. nuisance.

2. New India, of the 11th October, writes: —"On Sunday, October 8th, some of the residents at the head-quarters of the Theosophical Society at Adyar gave a private dinner party, consisting only of themselves, of two visitors staying at Adyar, and of the editorial staff of New India, in the large dining-room of Leadbeater Chambers. The party was in honour of Mr. B. P. Wadia, whose birthday it was, and was a family affair given by his co-workers. The dinner passed off happily, Indians and non-Indians mingling in the perfect amity which characterises our intercourse at Adyar, where the colour bar is unknown. There were two toasts proposed by myself: 'The King-Emperor —God bless him,' drunk standing, and 'The guest of the evening, our B. P. Wadia'. Mr. Wadia replied. We adjourned for coffee and ices to the verandah, and the party dispersed soon after 9 p.m. It seemed an innocent party enough, of a purely domestic character.

"Will it be believed—and I ask the question specially of my readers in England—that a spy of the Criminal Investigation Department was lurking all the time in the back verandah, through which the servants brought the food, watching the diners and taking down the brief speeches at the end?

"I hope that the Collector or District Magistrate did not order this outrageous intrusion on the decencies of private life, and in this hope I give the name and address of the officer: Sankaranarayana Pillai, Sub-Inspector of Police, Saidapet.

"I raise no objection to the police and the bureaucracy knowing what I said—always supposing that Mr. Sankaranarayana Pillai made an honest report; my speech was a harmless after-dinner speech of congratulation and gratitude to a faithful colleague. But it is disgusting to have a spy lurking among the servants in one's own home, and this under the Union Jack.

"That an Indian can be found who is willing to stoop to such work is, to me, the most saddening thought of all.

"Annie Besant."

institution in this Presidency where our young men can have a training in engineering. The authorities of the College admit about 150 youths every year out of about 650 that seek for admission and a vaster number of qualified young men who now keep off because of the certainty of their not being admitted. Facilities for instruction will be extended, we have been told, when the College is transferred to the new buildings at Guindy, but non-official opinion is emphatic that even then the needs of the Province will not be met."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 11th, 1916.

Why not Indian Boy Scouts?

4. New India, of the 11th October, observes:—"Presumably for obscure political reasons, our educational authorities have not thought fit to extend to Indian youth the benefits of the Boy Scout movement. We are informed that this admirable scheme finds a place in many European and Eurasian schools and colleges, as well as in many schools in Ceylon. But Hindu and Mussalman boys are debarred from the privileges enjoyed by their Christian fellow-students, and the consequence is that their early training lacks a most important characteristic. It was, we think, a Calcutta paper that lately drew attention to the poor response on the part of Bengal to the recruiting appeal for a Bengali double company, and we were told by the Indian Mirror that the paucity of recruits was evidence of the non-martial spirit of the Bengali nation. There are doubtless many reasons to account for the absence of adequate response, for the Bengali is nothing if not of martial race, but at least one of the reasons is to be found in the apathy of the Government towards the true essentials of education. We are now reaping lethargy partly as a result of lack of vitality in Indian educational methods in the past, and it is grossly unjust to try to shift the blame upon those who are the victims of our mismanagement. . . . . We shall be told that conditions are so different in India that the Boy Scout movement as practised in England would be difficult to introduce on account of climate, habits, caste, etc. All these 'explanations' are no more than excuses. The hard fact is that the bureaucrats have not yet learned to win the respect and affection of their Indian fellow-subjects, and, in the absence of that respect and affection they are far from eager to evoke the martial spirit which at present only lies dormant in every Indian heart. . . . . They do not trust Indians. But out of bureaucratic incapacity comes a very grave injustice to India's growing youth, for they are deliberately forbidden to cultivate the martial expression of their love of country, and at the same time are sneered at for having no martial spirit, when it is convenient for the Government to make use of it. . . . . To discriminate, as is the practice, between various classes of His Majesty's subjects in this country, is not only insulting to the self-respect of those discriminated against, but is the height of unwisdom with regard to the Empire's stability and is a standing example of the complete futility of Indian education as at present conducted.

"The Boy Scout movement is needed for the all-round development of India's future citizens, and the Government is neglecting an obvious duty so long a permission to make use of the movement is refused to Indian schools and colleges."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The new English School, Poona.

5. The Hindu, of the 11th October, has the following:—"A striking instance of the fostering care of the little tin gods in respect of education is brought to light by the Bombay Chronicle. The Deccan Education Society conducts a school in Poona known as the New English School, and the teaching in this school has come under the displeasure of the Education department because it is too efficient. . . . . To the lay mind it certainly appears that to exceed the prescribed standard, provided the mind of the student is not overburdened with ill-digested knowledge, is not exactly cause for tribulation. . . . . This small incident serves to show that something is very wrong indeed with the Education department in Bombay, and adds point to the debate in a recent session of the Legislative Council to which we drew attention at the time. It is hardly consistent to complain, as the official apologists often do, of the quality of the education given, when the whole system is so bureaucratised that it is a crime, doubtless visited with swift punishment through that powerful weapon of the bureaucracy, the grant-in-aid, to exceed the prescribed standard or deviate from it in the slightest. The whole question is one which will rapidly become acute when secondary education, now a kind of Cinderella with the public as with the authorities, receives its due share of attention."

Reservation of compartments.

6. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 4th October, observes: —"The Hon'ble Sir R. Gillan in replying to a question in the Imperial Council on the subject of reserving compartments to Europeans and others on railway trains, said that the practice appeared to be legal and was not opposed by the generality of Indian passengers. He was right in explaining that there was much to be said in favour of a practice which in view of the different habits of Europeans and Anglo-Indians particularly with regard to food appeared to be in accord with the sentiment of Indian as well as of European and Anglo-Indian travellers. We have no doubt of that. As we had occasion to say recently we have no faith in inter-racial intercourse being fostered on board a railway train where human nature is not at its best. . . . . There is no superiority or racial preference shown, if each community has compartments reserved for its members. We are glad to know that the Railway Board is considering the question in consultation with the railway administrations who, we dare say, have fairly gauged public opinion in the matter. The Railway Board need not be in the least doubt about such reserving being acceptable to all communities. In fact, reserving compartments is a sine qua non of peaceful railway travelling in India whatever be the social or legal aspect of the matter."

Sir S. P. Sinha.

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 3rd October, remarks:—"It has become the fashion in certain quarters to throw mud at Sir S. P. Sinha for accepting the Executive Council appointment. This baiting is not going on, it must be noted and it is significant, in Bengal, the home of the nationalist, the extremist and—we are sorry to state—the anarchist, but outside that province. . . . . In the other provinces, opinion, as reflected in the newspapers, is in favour of our distinguished countryman; and the opposition is confined to one or two papers whose hostility towards the veteran jurist is pronounced. Ever since his sagacious pronouncement on Home Rule in clear, emphatic terms, devoid of the idealist's style and language, Sir S. P. Sinha has constituted himself the butt of the extremist's banter and ridicule. . . . . He has but reflected the feelings and opinions of the majority of his countrymen who can look at political problems with clear vision, and without emotion and cant, and know something of practical politics. The fact that there has been a general chorus of approval and congratulations in itself means much and must give the extremists much food for reflection. If he thinks that the educated classes, as a whole, should take their opinions ready-made from him and be guided by him he is mistaken. . . . . We are all for home rule, and can have nothing but sympathy for those who are actively engaged in furthering the propaganda. But our sympathy has its limit. When these people are impatient of criticism and attempt to drive others into submission to their views and throw mud on leaders respected and unselfish, we must draw the line. Sir S. P. Sinha can, of course, afford to laugh at mud-throwers, but mud-throwing is a pastime that must be sternly discouraged and publicly denounced. We are reverted to this subject, because we see that Sinha-baiting is still going on, to the amusement of those responsible for it, but to the indignation of the general public."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

United India and Native States, Madras, Oct. 5th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, United India and Native States, for the week ending 5th October, says:—"New India in the issue of the 25th September criticises Sir S. P. Sinha for his inconsistency in attempting to serve the Congress and the bureaucracy. It remarks that Sir S. P. Sinha, the defender of the Press Act, is not a people's man, and that if he had been, Government would not have offered him the post. It occurs to us however that New India has not set up the same high standard of judgment with reference to other pseudo leaders in India. For instance, in the same issue of our contemporary in an article devoted to the Negapatam Conference, reference is made to that 'heaven-born statesman,' Mr. V. P. Madhava Rao who is spoken of in extravagant terms. We are told that Mr. Madhava Rao's speech was 'most inspring,' that 'anything coming from the lips of so experienced an official and statesman deserves very careful attention' and that 'men like Mr. Madhava Rao are a great national asset.' It must be remembered that all this laudation is bestowed on one who while he was Diwan of Mysore loved autocracy dearly for its own sake. If Sir Satyendra Sinha defended the Indian Press Act, Mr. V. P. Madhava Rao enacted the equally obnoxious Mysore Press Regulations, and we utterly fail to see the justice of a policy which while it condemns Sir S. P. Sinha, the defender of the Press Act, indulges in fulsome laudation of Mr. Madhava Rao, the author and inspirer of the Mysore Press Laws. If the former was an upholder of autocracy, so was Mr. Madhava Rao and we are at a loss to understand how Mr. Madhava Rao can be the people's man and a great national asset while we are told Sir S. P. Sinha is not. Perhaps our contemporary will throw some light on the feat of mental jugglery attempted by it in differentiating between the public careers of Sir Satyendra Sinha and Mr. V. P. Madhava Rao."

Wednesday Review, Trichinopoly, Oct. 4th, 1916.

8. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 4th October, states:—

The President-elect of the forthcoming Congress.

"It is something that at least the All-India Congress Committee has acquitted itself creditably in choosing Mr. A. C. Muzumdar as the President of the next Congress, after all the unseemly squabble over the matter. Though there might have been some excuse for some individual Congress Committees to be swayed by partisan considerations and go in for strange nominations, the Lucknow Reception Committee had absolutely no excuse whatsoever to flout the decision of the majority of the committees and put up an individual who had the least claim for the honour. Now that the All-India Committee has righted the blunder and saved the situation which was getting intolerable, we trust the Lucknow Committee will loyally abide by the decision and see to it that the Congress is not converted into a bear-garden as it was at Surat. We feel obliged to sound the warning as there are signs that certain partisans will try to make trouble. These worthies would rather allow the Congress to be wrecked than to bear their pet aims thwarted. A little firmness on the part of the leaders will save the Congress from drifting into the hands of the malcontents; and we are sure that they will not fail in their obvious duty to the organisation and to the country at large. Meanwhile a warning may not be superfluous and we have ventured to sound it."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Reformer, of the 4th October, says:—"Babu Ambica Charan Muzumdar has been elected President of the National Congress by a large majority of the all India Congress committee to whom the matter was quite unnecessarily referred by the Reception Committee at Lucknow. It is to be hoped that the Reception Committee will at least now gracefully yield to the decision of the country at large and reserve its particular adoration of Mrs. Besant for another occasion."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 7th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th October, remarks:—"As we anticipated Babu Ambika Charan Muzumdar has been elected to the Congress Presidentship by an overwhelming majority, the number of votes recorded in his favour being over sixty. His rival Mrs. Besant secured twenty-five votes, which eloquently points out that in spite of the deal of noise created by her friends and admirers, the country has refused to be cowed into submission. A good wine needs no bush, and we need not recount here the services of the veteran Muzumdar to the Congress cause."

The West Coast Spectator, of the 10th October, observes:—"The 'Nationalists' have submitted themselves to the inevitable, i.e., reconciled themselves to the election of Mr. Ambika Charan Mazumdar to the Congress Presidentship. They have hunted up some writings of Mr. Mazumdar to lay the very flattering unction to their soul that he is one of themselves. A certain paper expects him to 'put forth an immediate claim' for Home Rule. We cannot understand what this means. We do hope, however, that the veteran Congressman will not make himself ridiculous by saying that India should get complete Home Rule immediately after the war." WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 10th, 1916.

9. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 4th October, writes:— WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Sir Harold Stuart.

"The retirement of Sir Harold Stuart deprives the Madras Government of the valuable advice and guidance of one of the most distinguished members of the Indian Civil Service. Rising from the ranks of the Service to the highest position open to it, Sir Harold's career has been more eventful than falls to the lot of the great majority of its members. As a Superintendent of the Census, as Secretary to the Police Commission, as Secretary to the Home Department of the Government of India, and as the Director of the Criminal Intelligence Department he has been in touch with phases of Indian life which the general run of the Civil Servants have no conception of, and it is this side of his career which has marked him out as a great organiser and administrator. . . . . The Indian sun has not dried him into a soulless bureaucrat, but has warmed him into a genuine friend of the country, quietly determined to advance the interests of the people. . . . . It is to be hoped that his retirement from the Civil Service will not mean the severance of his association with Indian affairs, but that still higher spheres of activity will be open to him so that the country may continue to benefit by his vast experience and clear grasp of the problems on whose right solution depends the well-being of the people of India."

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 7th October, says:— INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 7th, 1916.

"After more than 34 years' service, ranging between an Assistant Collectorship and a Membership of Council, Sir Harold Stuart retires next week, leaving behind him a record of work with which any Civil Servant may feel proud satisfaction. . . . . Sir Harold Stuart's work, with which we are here concerned, showed him to be a man endowed with the qualities which did not suffer in the bureaucratic atmosphere in which he moved. His motto seemed to be purity and efficiency. The Police Department which he organised had, before him, a reputation for neither. He worked to impart to it both. Graduates came into favour for the first time in the Police Department. Mr. Stuart saw that they would have to confront difficulties from older men in the service, and he strove to encourage honesty by every means. He condoned minor faults in honest men, he encouraged them against dishonest methods of Police work. In spite of all his efforts, the Police is not yet perfect; but it has steadily improved, and for this improvement much of the credit must be assigned to Sir Harold Stuart. . . . . The reforms he effected in the administration of jails will ever redound to his credit. We must admit that we were strongly against certain principles of jail administration as conducted before the Penitentiary riot; and we know that it was our strong criticism, which perhaps Sir Harold Stuart did not quite like at the time, which eventually led to the reforms in the jails; and Mr. Kesava Pillai's name will ever be associated with Sir Harold's as the inspirer of the new policy which has raised the humane side of jail administration . . . . . It the subordinate police is what it is to-day the credit for it belongs entirely to the influence of Sir Harold Stuart who has been their sympathiser and friend. His relations with his friends have been characterised by frankness and cordiality which have encouraged them to speak out their mind quite openly. Among Indians he has a large number of admirers and friends who will all regret his departure. His spirit has liberalised the administration. His influence has been as lofty as is his spirit. He has striven to enlarge the interest of the people in the administration, to draw them more into participation in it. He has endeavoured to extend the scheme of Bench Magistrates and Village Union Panchayats. He has endeavoured to humanise the administration of jails, the treatment of juvenile criminals, and to increase the attractions of the Police Service. He has raised many men of merit who, but for him, would have had to end their career as Inspectors. Wherever his influence has extended it has conduced to the purity, efficiency and popularity of the administration. The Police are certainly more popular to-day than they were when he first took charge of the department. It is much more respectable. . . . . He has never sought popularity but he has been popular, because the principles and policy which he stood for have been popular. It must be admitted that his chances of distinction have not been as great as are his talents. He would have filled a far higher position with equal distinction, but circumstances limited his opportunities. . . . . He will be leaving India with the genuine good wishes of the people whose gratitude he has undoubtedly earned by his kindliness of heart, by his suavity of manners, and by his tact and sympathy. Good by nature and instinct, he became much better by his association, environments and training. He will leave a gap in the administration of the Presidency. His service for India is not yet ended. He will probably come back as the President of the Jail Commission which will be appointed soon after the war; and his services will be sought in other spheres as well. His departure from India will mean the disappearance of a most beneficial influence from the administration, of a most beneficial and progressive force which has moved the Presidency far forward."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 7th, 1916.

Listed appointments in the Madras Presidency.

10. The Hindu, of the 7th October, states:—"The announcement in the Gazette of India that the headships of two districts are placed on the list of appointments open to Members of the Provincial Civil Service in the Madras Presidency, and that His Excellency in Council with the sanction of the Secretary of State is now pleased to announce that a third post of Collector and District Magistrate shall be thrown open to the Provincial Civil Service in that Presidency, opens up a wide door for conjecture. Does this indicate the extent of concession granted as the outcome of the Report of the Public Services Commission, the publication of which is imminent? If so, it is a striking instance of the mountain being in labour and producing a mouse. It is difficult to account, in any case, for this announcement just before the publication of the report. . . . . There is a rumour current that the Government is contemplating the step of conferring the office of Registrar of Co-operative Societies on a European Member of the Indian Civil Service, and of appointing Diwan Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai, the present Registrar, to some other office. . . . . We must emphatically protest against the office of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies being given to a European Civilian. From the very commencement, the Department of Co-operative Societies in this Presidency has had at its head an Indian officer, and its great success and good work are due to the successive distinguished Indian officials who have held it. The nature of the work of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies is, it should be unnecessary to point out, such as only an Indian officer can best perform as it requires him to come into close contact with the people and to have a knowledge of their ways, customs and language. We are told that the work of the department in organizing societies, and forming groups of self-reliant men in rural parts is watched in some bureaucratic quarters with jealous and suspicious eyes. This can only be the symptom of an unhealthy official mind warped by senseless prejudice. We hope there is no foundation for the report, than which there could be no worse blunder in Lord Pentland's regimè, that the office of Registrar of Co-operative Societies is going to be manned in future by a European Civilian officer."

The West Coast Spectator, of the 10th October, writes:—"We are told that Diwan Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai will shortly be placed in charge of a district, and that a European would be appointed Registrar of Co-operative Societies. A European can never succeed as a Registrar, for there are linguistic and other disqualifications in the way. For successful work, the Registrar has to move with the people, study their susceptibilities first hand, and get himself acquainted with a hundred other details, which a knowledge of the vernaculars and of the people alone can facilitate." WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 10th, 1916.

Writing further on this subject, the Hindu, of the 12th October, says:—"The wording of the resolution of the Government of India, dated 3rd October 1916, upon which we commented the other day, is quite different from what was wired to us by the Associated Press from Simla. . . . . The Associated Press telegram led us to understand that two fresh Collectorships were thrown open to the Members of the Provincial Service. The third appointment now thrown open to the Provincial Service is not, we understand a concession to them, but, as we surmised the other day, meant to annex the office of Registrar of Co-operative Societies, to the Indian Civil Service and to provide its present incumbent, Diwan Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai, with a Collectorship as a compensatory measure. In the result the advantage to the Provincial Service under the present arrangement is nil and the Indian community loses the benefit of having an Indian as the head of the co-operative movement in this Presidency. We hope the Honourable non-official Members of the local Legislative Council will take the opportunity of the ensuing meeting to have their say on the subject." HINDU, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

Industries in the United Provinces.

11. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th October, has the following:—"A contemporary examines the causes that have led to the rapid development of industries in the United Provinces under the ægis of the Local Government, and detects the secret in Sir James Meston's practice of putting only square men in square holes. His departments directly connected with industries are run by professional men and not so-called experts and Indian Civil Service men who are supposed competent enough to do anything,—to know everything from agriculture to astronomy." WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 7th, 1916.

Indians and the Board of Revenue.

12. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th September, observes:—"The Hindu deplores the absence of a single Indian in the Revenue Board, and calls attention to an assurance given by Sir Murray Hammick, in the Legislative Council, that Indian officers of sufficient seniority in grade would be appointed to the Board when opportunities occurred. . . . . The service is not barren of competent Indians of sufficient seniority. For instance, there is Mr. Aziz-ud-din Sahib and there is Mr. Ramachandra Rao, who, we suppose, are seniors to Mr. Couchman. Surely nobody will say that these two Indian officers are not competent to sit in the Revenue Board. We are inclined to think that, whether they are aware of its existence or not, the colour bar still operates in making appointments to the higher branches of the Public Service." WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Sept 7th, 1916.

Self-government for India.

13. In commenting on an editorial in the Madras Mail on "European organisation," New India, of the 9th October, writes:—"'A greater share of self-government' is not what India asks. She demands self-government.

"When she gains it, British residents in India will have a share in it, as Indian residents in England have a share in the self-government of Great Britain. Europeans will most certainly have 'their due share in the advancement of this country in friendly co-operation with' Indians, if they are on an equal footing, if Indians are no longer disarmed and helpless, and if a minute minority of foreigners no longer makes laws for the Indian nation, and taxes them as it wills. We are glad that the Anglo-Indians are going to organise openly, for open antagonism is better than underground and petty warfare." NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 10th, 1916.

A Home Ruler's address.

14. New India, of the 10th October, has the following :—"The Hon'ble Mr. C. Y. Chintamani devoted the major portion of his presidential address at the United Provinces Provincial Conference to the Home Rule issue. He discussed several of the arguments advanced against the movement, in his characteristic convincing style, pointing out how, as the Grand Old Man (Dadabhoi Naroji) recently repeated, Home Rule is the only remedy for our political ills. . . . . We have always claimed Home Rule 'as our just right'. Of course, during the past few months, our demand has been more urgent; but that is due to the force of recent events, and not to any inclination on India's part to take unfair advantage of the war. . . . . The Hon'ble Mr. Chintamani was equally convincing in his other argument that the present system of Government has outlived its utility. We have certainly little to complain of as to its discharge of what Dr. Woodrow Wilson calls the 'constituent' functions of the Government. The failure of the British is with respect to its 'ministrant' duties. They have not been able 'to render a satisfactory account of its work for the improvement of the condition of the people'. For instance, have the people enough food to eat? Do they live in healthy conditions? Is their soul nourished by means of education and other elevating influences? It is when we consider the answers to these and several other equally telling questions asked by Mr. Chintamani, that we find ourselves in a position to understand whether the British Government in its present shape has been a success in India.

UNITED INDIA AND NATIVE STATES, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

The European Association.

15. United India and Native States, for the week ending 12th October, writes :—"The European Association of Calcutta has placed itself on the war path. In a memorandum explaining the objects of the association, the public are informed that every European in this country should endeavour to realise that as a member of the ruling race he has far greater importance as a political entity than he might have attained in the British Isles. This mischievous twaddle to stir up racial prejudices on the part of the Calcutta Association will, we are sure, be condemned by the more rational section of official and non-official Europeans who ought to be content with a position of equality with their Indian fellow subjects. At a time when thoughtful and cultured Englishmen like the Lord Bishop of Madras have deprecated the assumption of superiority on the part of the Europeans in India which sometimes makes them look down on the Indian as a conquered race and the complacency which often leads some Englishmen recognise that they belong to what is called the ruling race it is disappointing to find the European Association of Calcutta setting up such preposterous claims. The Leader remarks with perfect propriety that the racial arrogance reflected in the Memorandum of the European Association is responsible for that assumption of superiority which hurts and irritates Indians most, and that the existence of this sort of feeling must stand in the way of the much desired rapproachment between Indians and Europeans."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The emigration enquiry.

16. The Hindu, of the 13th October, remarks :—"From a telegram from Ootacamund which we published yesterday, it appears that the Madras Government have resolved to depute an Indian gentleman along with an I.C.S. officer to conduct the enquiry in connection with the emigration of Indian coolies to Ceylon and the Federated Malay States. Our thanks are due to the Government for this timely compliance with the representations made on the subject. Our contemporary the Madras Times makes, however, too fine a point of it when it says that 'the whole proceedings should tend to make people specially confident in the Madras Government as at present administered, seeing that it has shown itself ready to listen to reasonable representations.' This puts us in mind of the saying that one swallow does not make a summer. We know of a host of 'reasonable representations', which have found the Government unready to listen. The tale of past representations unheard and unresponded to, is rather a long one; and we hope the good beginning now made will be continued in the interests of all concerned."

The "Real Indian Nationalism" Series of Tracts.

17. The following appears in New India of the 13th October :—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

"The D.O. Tracts.

"A 'reader of New India' writes—

With reference to the letter from the D.I.G. of Police, Railways and C.I.D., No. 33—25 N.P., which appeared in the columns of New India on 6th October 1916, I have to inform you if the above are not circulated 'On His Majesty's Service,' yet they are under distribution, by Tahsildars of His Majesty's Service.

I had the chance of perusing the tracts Nos. 1 and 2, officially circulated to the 'village munsif' of my place by the Tahsildar of the taluk.

"We are obliged to our correspondent. It is an uphill battle, when the bureaucracy can take our money for our own publications, and also use the people's money to subsidise publications written against us. We presume that it will not be pretended that when a Tahsildar of a taluk sends the pamphlets to village munsifs he does it at his own expense."

Indian political reform.

18. New India, of the 13th October, has the following :—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

"A Scandalous Assumption.

"The comments of the Pioneer on the memorandum of the non-official members of the Supreme Council on the reforms to be introduced after the war are very significant. They are based on the disgraceful assumption that the demand is in return for services rendered by India during the war. The meanness which that journal thus imputes to the Indians is due, we believe, to its own incapacity to recognise or appreciate the noble side of any incident. And as to its description of the signatories, we prefer to know their importance from the words of the King-Emperor rather than from those of an Anglo-Indian sheet. They are, as His Majesty said during his last visit to India, 'chosen representatives of the people'. And if the Punjab representative did not condescend to subscribe to the memorandum, the Pioneer has to thank the nature of the Council Regulations which sometimes keep the best man out of legislative assemblies."

Medical relief.

19. In concluding an article on "Indigenous Medicines", the Indian Patriot, of the 13th October, says :—"We cannot start enough Medical Colleges throughout India; the suggestion for vernacular courses of training in western science to create a class of village practitioners is not being seriously taken up. Easier than to work up this suggestion would be to place an officer on special duty, organise the existing agency which administers relief, call upon the district and taluk boards to send up reports of their working and progress. The resources of Government are great: and a progressive expenditure of two lakhs of rupees a year for medical relief, such as Sir Harold Stuart announced four years ago for primary education, would be hailed with delight by the public.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

"What, however, is of utmost importance is that Government should realise the urgency of the need for the extension of medical relief. Is it or is it not a fact that our sanitary organisation is inadequate? Is it or is it not a fact that a larger number of people die from preventible diseases than any other people on the civilized earth? Nothing, in our opinion, is more urgent than the extension of medical relief. Many among the poor are dying, first because preventible diseases are not prevented, and, secondly, because medical relief and nourishment in sickness are not available. This is a fact: and this fact must urge Government to active measures. Perhaps after the war—a common enough phrase in the mouths of the statesmen of the day—we may have a committee of European experts examining the indigenous methods! They might submit reports, and ten years hence members of, perhaps, more enlarged Legislative Councils might be asking questions whether the report of the committee would be acted upon, just as we now ask about the report of the Decentralisation Commission. That is not the way, we submit, to handle this very serious problem of medical relief. It is urgent today; it will be more urgent than ever to-morrow.

It is a problem which has been calling for solution these many years. We have not lifted a little finger yet. The Government have been inert; it knows that its existing institutions cannot meet the situation, and yet it has remained content to creep along. The public have now come forward to act. Will the Government step forward and stimulate this spirit by promise of active support?"

III.—Legislation.

New India, Madras, Oct. 7th, 1916.

The Government of India (Amendment) Act.

20. In commenting on the proceedings of Joint Select Committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons on the Government of India (Amendment) Bill reported in India (London), New India, of the 7th October, states:—"So bright a ray of light has flashed across the dark sky of India's political night, that we glance up hopefully and almost ask: 'Is it the dawning?' Is there really a hope that the sun of liberty will soon rise above the eastern horizon, that England, the Mother of Western Liberty, will at last turn her eyes to the 'Great Dependency,' and demand from her representatives here an account of their stewardship? . . . . It seems likely on the face of it, especially from Lord Islington's anxiety to validate Regulations, Ordinances, and certain Acts, that these are all ultra vires, and that the weapons of coercion may be broken by appeals to the Privy Councils. Lord Loreburn marks the Defence of India Act as at the head of the illegal laws, and it seems as though the Parliament of Great Britain is the only power that can take away from us—and it will never do so—our rights and liberties as British subjects. Then every man of the hundreds interned under the Defence Act has a remedy; the sentences passed on the conspirators may be upset as ultra vires; but for those hanged under the Act —which the Civil and Military Gazette wishes to be extended to the trial of ordinary political offenders—for them, they have passed beyond human justice or injustice, and have suffered a wrong without a remedy here. Tried under the Penal Code some of them, at least, would have been legally condemned to death, so that the end would have been the same. Under these circumstances, some of the patriotic lawyers of Bengal should bestir themselves, and take legal steps to release those who have been interned under the law which the Supreme Council was incompetent to pass."

New India, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

Writing further on this subject, New India, of the 9th October, observes:—"The more we think over the Report of the Joint Committee of the Lords and Commons of England, the more does Hope, the Bird of Heaven, build her nest in our heart. We have the authority of Lord Loreburn, the late Lord Chancellor of England, for asserting that the Defence of India Act is first on the list of the Acts which are no Acts, Acts which the Governor-General in Legislative Council had no power to make. Here is, indeed, a gospel of hope for the unfortunate men sentenced under it, for the hundreds interned under it in Bengal. We very much mistake the spirit of Bengal if many a writ of habeas corpus is not demanded for those interned under the Act, or, if the fact that they are not actually within the four walls of a prison prevents the issue of such a writ, then some other legal way will be found for setting them free.

"Babu Surendranath Bannerji is sure to direct action to be taken to set free his colleague, acquitted in a Court and interned after his release. And are there not men in the Punjab and in the United Provinces who are also suffering under this illegal Act? . . . . No such message has reached India for many a day. We are told that the Parliament of Great Britain stands between us and the men in power here for the time being, and that against these coercive disabling laws, passed by usurped power, we can appeal to Parliament for a remedy against the injustices wrought here. The helplessness of our High Courts will be removed, and they will again be clothed with their pristine power to protect the lieges against oppression, and they will be able again to declare boldly: 'There is no wrong without a remedy.'

"Let India now speak out clerly and boldly, demanding that Parliament shall refuse to validate this eighteenth century type of legislation, and let Parliament declare that the Great Queen's Proclamation that Indians share the protection of her laws is not a lie. Then shall this mass of mediæval fetters be thrown into the rubbish heap, and Indians will stand erect, like other subjects of the Crown. Such a God given opportunity has never before come to us since we passed out of the tyranny of John Company under the ægis of the Crown. Let us use it to the full. Oh for Charles Bradlaugh in this day of India's hope! Who, in Britain's Parliament, will speak for India."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 9th October, remarks:—"We published in our last issue the first portion of the discussion which took place in the Joint Committee which had been appointed to consider the Government of India (Amendment) Bill, and we publish elsewhere to-day another instalment. The matters discussed are of much interest and importance in respect of their bearing upon the constitutional legal and political rights of the people of this country. . . . . It was represented by Mr. Charles Roberts that there is a whole mass of invalid legislation in India which does bar the right to sue the Secretary of State on certain points. Sir Courtenay Ilbert upon being questioned by Lord Loreburn produced a list of such Indian Acts, between thirty and forty in number, which was circulated to the committee as a confidential document. It was found that of the list the Defence of India Act was one, as it contains a clause saying that the judgment of the Commissioners appointed under the Act shall be final and conclusive. . . . . It is a matter for earnest consideration by the Indian public, as to how many of the fundamental rights belonging to them as British subjects, have been nullified by the Acts of the Indian legislature. With regard to British born subjects the matter is even of graver importance. It is a debatable question how far the order of the Bombay Government under the Defence of India Act prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Bombay Presidency is warranted by law. A Bombay correspondent has pointed out that an Englishman's allegiance depends upon the Magna Charta, the Habeas Corpus Act, Bill of Rights and other fundamental laws. The Governor General in Legislative Council, according to the Indian Councils Act as now consolidated by the Government of India Act 1915, has not power to make any law abrogating any part of the laws or constitution of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown of the United Kingdom."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 10th, 1916.

Referring to the comments of the Hindu, of the 9th October (above) on this subject, New India, of the 10th October, says:—"We are very glad to see that the Hindu has drawn public attention to the usurpation of the power to deprive Indians of the rights of personal liberty and quiet possession of property without a sentence following on due trial and conviction, pronounced by a Court of law, and we trust that the leading papers all over India will do the same. . . . . So splendid a constitutional opening has never before come to India, and of it should be taken the fullest advantage. The 'Defence of India Act' used with great harshness and to ends not contemplated even by its framers, may be our first point of attack."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 10th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 10th October, writes:—"The discussion in the Joint Committee on the Government of India Amendment Bill relating to clause 5, a summary of which appears elsewhere, was of much interest. The subject was whether Members of Executive Councils should not be allowed to be connected with some trade or business during their tenure of office, without actively participating in the management. The reasons given by the Government for enacting a clause empowering Members of Executive Councils to be sleeping partners in some trade or business are of a novel and specious character. It is well known that the advent of the English into India was for the purpose of trade and commercial gain. The object with which clause 5 was proposed, and its retention attempted to be justified by the Government, seems to show that the Britishers have not quite divested themselves of their original vocation in this country. . . . . It may be incidentally pointed out with reference to a current rumour in Madras that a European business man is in the running for the forthcoming vacancy in the office of a Member of the Madras Executive Council now occupied by an Indian gentleman, the following remarks of Lord Islington do not seem to give support to it. . . . . The whole discussion and the division which followed it while being of an interesting character, shows how Indian interests are being nearly shipwrecked from the want of Indian representatives to urge their own case. The Indian people are now in the position of spectators who behold, as if in a cinema show, the manner in which their interests in vital matters have been debated and disposed of, without reference to their sentiments and views, by well-intentioned but ill-informed foreigners."

IV.—Native States.

United India and Native States, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

21. United India and Native States, for the week ending 12th October, writes:—"The 58th birthday of His Highness the Raja of Cochin was celebrated on the 28th ultimo and needless to say the Raja's subjects displayed genuine enthusiasm on the occasion. There were spontaneous rejoicings throughout the State, all public offices and schools were closed, and at every important centre meetings were held to pray for His Highness' prosperity, and to congratulate him on the auspicious occasion. We are told that Brahmins throughout the State were fed in temples and chatrams and that in several cases substantial doles in money (Dakshina) were made to members of this community. We must confess we fail to perceive the merit underlying the feeding of apparently able-bodied persons belonging to a particular caste to the exclusion of others, and perhaps Mr. Bhore will bestow his attention on this aspect of the celebration, and introduce in future celebrations arrangements less open to objection from this point of view. By all means let not the State stint the expenditure on charity, but the amount must be spent on the really deserving people without invidious distinctions as to caste or creed. The blind, the dumb, the maimed, the widows and the orphans are proper objects of charity and the scope of the Sirkar's munificence must not be circumscribed by petty consideration of caste, for we refuse to believe that any intelligent Hindu now-a-days has faith in the feeding and enriching of Brahmins simply because they are Brahmins and not on any other consideration. . . . . We are sure that the enlightened Cochinites are above such petty superstitions, which are certainly out of harmony with the spirit of the times."

His Highness the Raja of Cochin's birthday.

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

22. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th October, writes:—America, which poses to be an advocate of the principle of equality among human beings, tried more than once recently to make a law for preventing Eastern races like the Japanese and the Indians from settling therein. The Japanese naturally resented this and the result was an agreement between the United States and Japan empowering the officials in the former not to allow more than a certain number of men to enter it every year. But the exhibition in connection with the opening of the Panama Canal attracted a large number of Japanese and we learn that a Bill has again been brought forward in the American Parliament to prevent the influx of the Eastern races into the Republic. This news naturally provoked the Japanese, and it was thought that the two countries would fall out. But the trouble has been avoided for the present by the American Bill being allowed to lie over. It is to be noted here that, as the Bill refers to the Eastern races in general, it seeks to prevent the entry of Indians also into America. It is, therefore, the duty of the British Government to protest against this Bill. We hope the Government of India will issue a communiquè regarding the action taken by it in this matter.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

America and the Eastern races.

23. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 10th October, observes:—Roumania is talked of in a section of the press as having delayed entering the war only to see which side was likely to win and as having decided now because she saw that the Allies were sure of their triumph and Russia was advancing with a huge army towards Austria. There are very few in this world who act with purely altruistic motives. France is keen upon obtaining Alsace and Lorraine. Russia wishes to have a part of Austrian territory. So, too, are the rest of the Powers desirous of gaining something or other. It may, therefore, be true that Roumania wishes to annex Transylvania. We cannot blame her for this. The fact that her greed of territory did not allow her to abandon the side of righteousness shows she has some regard for justice. The fact that she has joined the Allies shows that she has begun to see that the Allies will be sure to triumph. We hope that this expectation will be fulfilled.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Oct. 10th, 1916.

Roumania and the war.

24. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 30th September, writes:—Two years have passed since the war began. During this period hundreds of thousands of precious lives have been lost, thousands of women have been made widows and hundreds of children have become orphans. Numerous families have been ruined, many cities have been destroyed, commerce has suffered incalculable loss, the poor are starving and suffering hardships and difficulties and restlessness prevails all over the world. Who is the cause of all this? It is the cruel Kaiser and the Crown Prince whom the whole world is cursing, and upon whom every person is showering reproach and all are crying aloud for their effacement from the page of existence.

The editor, on the authority of Home papers, states that preparations on a very large scale are being made to prolong the war. He thinks that such preparations are being made as will enable the Allies to crush the enemy in a single onslaught and thereby save the world from the cruel Kaiser.

In referring to these preparations made by the British Government the editor thinks that they are very intently engaged in these and that the time will shortly come when the enemy will receive the punishment he richly deserves.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

"The end of the war in Europe."

The editor advises his co-religionists to assist the Government in every possible way in bringing this terrible war to a speedy conclusion and not to lose this opportunity than which they will never get a better one to enable them to demonstrate their loyalty.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

"The views of Mr. Lloyd George."

25. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 3rd October, in giving a translation of the remarks made by Mr. Lloyd George to the correspondent of the United Press, America, in the course of which he gave reasons for the prolongation of the war, says:—There is no doubt that Britain has such enormous quantities of munitions as will enable her to thoroughly crush the enemy. The strength of her fleet has demonstrated to the world that she has overpowered Germany, which is at the present moment in a disturbed condition.

II.—HOME ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Police.

DESABHIMANI, Cuddalore, Sept. 2nd, 1916.

The report on the administration of the Police department in 1915.

26. The Desabhimani,* of the 2nd September, comments as follows in English upon the report on the administration of the Police Department in 1915:—The report on the administration of the Police department during the year 1915 has been reviewed by the Government, and we are thankful to be in receipt of a copy of the review which contains particulars of some interest to the readers. The strength of the police force was 32,918 at the close of the year, or one police officer to 1,257 of the population, and the total cost of the department during the year rose from Rs. 92 lakhs in 1914 to Rs. 94 lakhs. In spite of this growing expenditure there has been much difficulty experienced in all but few districts in recruitment, and there are numerous resignations and desertions. The number of vacancies in the constabulary at the close of the year was larger than at the end of the previous year, namely, 1,301 against 1,105. Nine hundred and ninety-seven men resigned during the year, while 560 were discharged and 587 deserted. These figures indicate that the police service is not quite popular. But the Government hopes that increased rates of pay which have recently been sanctioned will make it more attractive. At the same time the Government observes that though the total additional expenditure is large, the improvement in the position of the individual constable is small and a further substantial increase may be necessary to secure men of the right stamp and keep them in the force. But as the Government rightly observed, much may be done towards the curtailment of ever-increasing expenditure in the department by way of transferring some of the duties to village police to be managed and supervised by the formation of a popular and representative body as the village panchayats in place of the village magistrate. Unless and until this reform is effected in the village administration, the mere transference of some of the duties of the police to the village police is not likely to produce the desired result. The percentage of departmental punishments continued high, being 30·9 to the actual strength as against 27·2 in 1913 and 26·6 in 1914. But the Inspector-General has given assurance that the punishments were, on the whole, carefully considered and that most officers endeavoured to exercise their powers of punishment judiciously and he at the same time feels that a real improvement in the morale of the force can only be achieved if the quality of the men obtained is improved by granting them better pay and prospects. The Government agree that, if the police service is made more attractive, the wider field of selection will make it possible to be more strict about the character of candidates, and the desirableness of the employment will make men more careful to avoid losing it by misconduct. They also make the following observations which, we hope, is worth mentioning:—

On the other hand unduly harsh or inconsiderate treatment will greatly diminish the attraction of good pay, and the Inspector-General and the Deputy Inspector-General must ever be on the alert to check individual idiosyncrasies. Some officers, for example, are too rigid about the grant of leave, with the result that a large number of men absent themselves without leave and then in the interests of the discipline must be punished. The policeman is always on duty even on public holidays, when indeed his work is often heavier than usual, and the Inspector-General should consider whether something cannot be done in the way of allowing men a day off duty every week, or alternatively a larger amount of casual leave.

* Received in the current week.

"While we warmly agree with sympathetic attitude of the Government towards the police force, we at the same time cannot but mention here the absolute necessity for stern discipline and close surveillance to maintain a high standard of efficiency and integrity in the department. The powers of the police are enormous and the temptations too many and unless the authorities are smart and strict and keep a strong hold on their subordinate police, the morale of the police force is likely to become degenerate—a situation fraught with evil consequences.

"The system of rewarding the service rendered by village officers and private persons is one calculated to enlist the co-operation of the people in police administration. We are glad to find there was a satisfactory increase in the rewards granted during the year to members of the police and to private individuals.

"Regarding the selection of Sub-Inspectors and their training we are glad to learn that selection of Sub-Inspectors should in future be made in each district by a committee consisting of the District Magistrate, the District Superintendent of Police, the Deputy Inspector-General, if possible, and one or more Indian gentlemen of local influence and position, and there is reason to hope that this system will lead to the selection of a still better class of men.

"If we turn to the statistics of crime, their detection and prevention, the total number of true cases of cognizable crime under the penal code excluding nuisances, for the year under report was 54,474 against 53,178 in the previous year, and the increase in the number of grave crimes was 1,424 chiefly under house-breaking and cattle theft. The number of murders was 702 against 704. The number of cattle thefts during the year was 4,161 against 3,575 in 1914. There has been slow but steady progress in the detection of crime, the percentage being 24·4 against 23·9 in 1914 and 22·8 in 1913. Several reasons may be assigned for poor detection. The extensiveness of station areas, the frequent transfers of Sub-Inspectors when not necessary, the unnecessary interposition of the Circle Inspector between the investigating officer in charge of the police station and the officer in charge of the main or sub-division, all these require suitable modification to make the police enterprise always successful. The abolition of the class of Circle Inspectors has been introduced as an experiment in the Trichinopoly district and its results are awaited."

(b) Courts.

27. Referring to the Government order on the report of the High Court on the administration of justice in this Presidency in 1915, the Swadesamitran, of the 4th October, says:—The opinions expressed by different Judges on the system of trial with the aid of jurors and assessors are worthy of note. The Sessions Judge of North Arcot says that in many cases the verdict of the jurors was unnatural. But we see that out of the 115 cases which were tried by this Judge with the help of a jury, he agreed with their verdict in 107 cases and of the 120 cases tried with the help of assessors, he agreed with their opinion in 78 cases and with the opinion of the majority in 19 cases. Thus even in the case of the assessors, it was only in 23 cases that the Judge differed from the majority of them. These figures prove only that the system of trial by jurors and assessors has been working satisfactorily and they do not at all warrant the conclusion of the Sessions Judge that the verdict of the jurors was unnatural in many cases. It is only the conclusion of the Judge that seems to be unnatural. The Sessions Judge of Coimbatore says that he did not receive much assistance from the assessors. We concur in his view that, as the Judge is not bound to act on the opinion of the assessors as is the case with jurors, the former do not naturally take an interest in their work. The opinion of this Judge only adds strength to the suggestion that the distinction between jurors and assessors should be done away with and that all sessions cases should be tried with a jury. Though in the Sessions Court at Kurnool, the Judge had no occasion whatever to differ from the jury, he complains that the jurors did not pay any attention to the evidence adduced during the trial or his summing up at the end of it. But the Sessions Judge of Bellary says that, if the jurors are given a good history of the facts of any case, they take an interest in the proceedings and give a sound verdict. The Sessions Judge of South Malabar wholly condemns the system of juries. But in 64 cases out of 73 tried by him, the Judge has concurred with the opinion of the jury. All the other Sessions Judges speak well of this system, and the opinion of the few Judges, who have spoken against it is belied by their own decisions. Coming to the history of the jury system, it does not seem to have attained perfection in any country. If, as is admitted by Mr. Lowell of the Harward University, this system has not attained perfection in America, how could it be expected in India? The only qualification for a juror in India is that he should be paying not less than a certain amount as kist. This is not sufficient. If some educational qualification is also insisted on for a juror, the system is bound to work more satisfactorily than is the case now. Steps should also be taken to prevent the Police officials and the opposite party bringing any pressure to bear upon the jurors. The fact that gentlemen on the list of jurors have to wait for a number of days at the court-house, to know whether they are empanelled or not is also a discouraging factor. As the Indians are by nature afraid to act against their conscience, if men having some culture are chosen for the jury, there can never be a miscarriage of justice, so the authorities should not do away with the system of trial by juries, but try to remove the existing defects in it and secure its permanency.

The jury system.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 10th, 1916.

The assessors and jurors.

28. In its leader under the heading "The Jury and Assessors," the Manorama, of the 10th October, dwells upon the evil consequences of incompetent and ignorant persons being selected as jurors and assessors, which it ascribes to the careless preparation of the list of jurors and assessors, and upon the necessity of making provisions in the courts for their conveniences, the absence of which makes several respectable and competent persons unwilling to serve as such, and regrets that some of the Sessions Judges in the Presidency should have passed strictures on the jury system, before trying to induce competent and respectable persons to come forward and serve as jurors and assessors.

(d) Education.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

Disparity in education between India and other countries.

29. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th October, says:—The population of Japan, according to the census of 1913, is 53 millions, while that of British India, excluding all Native States and other territories under the rule of independent Princes, is 243 millions. But the number of students having primary education in Japan in 1913–14 was 7,095,755, while in British India, which is far bigger than Japan, both in extent and population, the number of such students in 1915 was only 6,500,000! This speaks volumes of the condition of primary education here. In Mysore, the percentage of boys and girls, who are actually reading in schools and colleges, among those who are of an age to have education, works at 27½, while in British India the same percentage is only 18. Coming to the percentage of persons having education among the whole population of a country, it is 20 per cent in Great Britain, 15 per cent in Australia and Japan, and only 3 per cent in British India. Then again the number of schools imparting scientific education was 8,566 in Japan in 1913–14, while that of such schools in British India in 1914–15 was only 189. So it cannot be denied that India is behind every other country in education. The efforts of the late Mr. Gokhale to introduce compulsory primary education in some portions of British India proved a failure. It is surprising to note that when Native States, which copy their institutions from British India, have introduced free and compulsory education in their territories, it has not yet been found possible to introduce it in British India. We hope the people and the Government in this country will bestow their attention upon this subject.

Vernaculars as the media of instruction in South Canara.

BODHINI, Udipi, South Canara, September 1916.

30. In an article under this heading, Rai Bahadur M. Raghunath Rao, a retired Assistant Inspector of Schools, writes to the Bodhini, for September, as follows:— For centuries past the medium of instruction in schools in this district was in some places Canarese and in others Malayalam. During the past seven or eight years however, the managers of some of the Christian schools, giving too literal a meaning to the phrase "instruction through the vernacular," have begun to teach the Tulu and Konkani dialects. Others have begun to adopt English in place of the vernacular. The reason they give for doing this is that the vernacular of the district cannot be said to be Canarese, inasmuch as it is the mother tongue of only 19 per cent of the population, while 43 per cent speak Tulu and 17 per cent Konkani. They, therefore, contend that the schools should be free to choose a language which is the mother tongue of the pupils and that Canarese, if it is insisted by the authorities, may be taught through the medium of the mother tongue. The Director of Public Instruction, without enquiring into the soundness of this argument, is said to have approved elementary text-books in the dialects of Tulu and Konkani for use in primary schools, and in some secondary schools and one college the Inspector of Schools has sanctioned the adoption of English as the medium of instruction from the infant standard. Now it behoves us to consider whether the contention of these Christian managers of schools is right, or whether these orders which were passed by the Educational authorities as a result of that contention are likely to prove prejudicial to the interests of the people or to the vernacular of the district. The official language of the district has, from time immemorial, been Canarese. Although the number speaking the language as mother tongue is only 19 per cent of the total population, more than 90 per cent of the people in the district know the language. The language used for all official and social purposes, such as correspondence, invitations, etc., is Canarese. The so-called vernaculars of Konkani and Tulu, unlike Malayalam and Canarese, have no scripts of their own. They adopt the Canarese script. Nor have they any literature in the language, excepting, perhaps, the few handbooks, chiefly religious tracts, recently published by the Christian Missionaries. The Canarese script which they have adopted is unsuited to these dialects, which contain sounds for which there are no corresponding symbols in Canarese; and Canarese when learnt through the medium of these dialects is as polished as the English spoken by the German Missionaries. The Jesuit Missionaries likewise think that Konkani is sufficient for the purposes of their religious propaganda and construe vernacular as mother tongue. What wonder that the foreign officers who are not acquainted with the truth of the situation should be induced to champion the merits of the mother tongue! Even among the Tulu-speaking people, the tendency is to abandon Tulu in favour of Canarese. Among the Konkani-speaking Christians, too, wherever English is known, the native dialect is neglected. The Missionaries alone seem to want Tulu and Konkani.

The writer then proceeds to show that even these dialects are not uniform, but vary so much as to look different languages altogether when spoken by different sects or communities, and thereupon observes:—We must now enquire how Konkani and Tulu have gained so much prominence of late. The German Missionaries had to learn Canarese and Tulu for preaching the gospel to illiterate people in their own language. Many of them, not finding it convenient to learn both these languages, confined themselves to some one language and those who know only Tulu have some schools under them and these naturally urge the adoption of Tulu as the medium of instruction, and their aim does not go further than to enable the pupils to read the religious tracts in that language. In the United Kingdom the mother tongue of Scotch and Welshmen is not English; and yet these men, it is said, do not want English to be taught through the medium of their dialect. They begin English from their infancy. Why should our district adopt a different policy then? Prior to the advent of the foreign Christian Missionaries, the Christians and other communities were in perfect harmony among each other. Of late, differences have arisen among them. The Christians, non-Christians, Catholics and Protestants are each seeking the narrow interests of their own community. Each caste has a college and each sect a school for itself. Instead of healthy competition there is much mutual jealousy and hatred. There is not a fraction of the harmony which existed among them about forty years ago. If the common language, too, should disappear, God alone knows what calamities might arise. It behoves every patriotic citizen and every officer of Government, who has the well-being of the people at heart, to consider this aspect of the question in good time.

BODHINI, Udipi, South Canara, September 1916.

The Bodhini, for September, gives a translation of an article adapted from the July number of the Modern Review purporting to point out that the type of education which is now given in India is hollow and useless, being without any intrinsic economic value which would enable the possessor of that education to earn his bread in any part of the world.

(k) General.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Oct. 2nd, 1916.

31. The Vidyabhanu,* of the 2nd October, writes:—We learn that Mr. Langhurst, the Superintendent of the Archæological Department, has suggested to the Government that the work of unearthing ancient monuments can be stopped for the present in view to economising expenditure, and it is enough if the department preserves those already discovered. We are surprised at this suggestion, as it was this officer himself that recently pleaded for the continuance of the former work even during the period of war on the ground that it was the only means of getting at the ancient history of Southern India, and we hope the Government will not act upon his suggestion. If men like Mr. T. Gopinatha Rao, M.A., and Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyangar, M.A., who have been most zealously engaged in the work of archæological research in South India, are to be doing no more than oiling the existing monuments and keeping them free from shrubs and weeds, it will not only damp their enthusiasm in the work but also shut out the only means of the people of this country knowing new things about India. So we entreat the Government not to give up the work of unearthing ancient monuments on any account.

Archæological research.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

32. The Hindu Nesan, of the 4th October, says:—We learn that the majority of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council have presented a memorandum to the Viceroy detailing the reforms which are to be introduced in India after the war and pointing out certain disadvantages which His Majesty's Indian subjects are now labouring under. We sincerely approve of this action of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council as the representatives of the Indian public; but we do not know why three of these members kept aloof in this matter. Perhaps they thought that no contentious measure should be forced upon the Government during this war!

Reforms after the war.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

33. Adverting to the retirement of Sir Harold Stuart from service, the Hindu Nesan, of the 4th October, observes:—Though Sir Harold Stuart is a member of the Civilian bureaucracy, he cannot be said to have been an out and out bureaucrat throughout his service. Though he was only a Madras Civilian, he was in touch with the Government of India and he had therefore a wider experience than other civilians can lay claim to. His official career has always been characterised by a breadth of view and an interest in public good. It will be no exaggeration to say that the present satisfactory condition of the Police department is wholly due to him. His ideas were always noble and merit was the only thing to secure his favour. Many may not be aware that, like the late Mr. G. H. Stuart, Sir Harold is a highly cultured man and that he had also a sound knowledge of international questions. So the farewell entertainment arranged for him by men like Mr. Kesava Pillai, one of the trusted leaders of the people, is not a formal function, but shows the esteem in which Sir Harold is held by the Indians.

* Received in the current week.

The Lokopakari, of the 9th October, has a laudatory article about Sir Harold Stuart. LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

The Indian Educational Service.

34. The Hindu Nesan, of the 4th October, observes:—We see from a list placed on the table of the Imperial Legislative Council by Sir C. Sankaran Nayar at the last meeting that out of the 308 persons nominated to the Indian Educational Service since 1896, only 10 were Indians. Though a large number of Indians take the trouble of acquiring English qualifications in addition to their degrees here, the Government is disinclined to nominate them to the Indian Educational Service. We do not understand what special advantage there is in the Professors teaching Indian students in Indian Colleges being Englishmen. The only advantage we see is the constant rupture between the Professors and the students. HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

Stray notes.

35. Under this heading a correspondent, under the nom-deplume of Narada, writes in the Prapanchamitran of the 6th October as follows:—I read in the papers that His Excellency the Viceroy will receive the press deputation at the end of January next, subject to certain conditions. When I was thinking what these conditions can be, there was a whisper in my ears that it was not the Viceroy himself but his Private Secretary that will receive the deputation and that this was the prescribed condition. Can this be true? If true, it is strange that the representatives of the press should have consented to such an arrangement. If so, what prevents the Private Secretary from deputing one of his clerks to receive the deputation? PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

Mr. Ambikacharan Muzumdar has, after all, been elected as the President of the next Congress. There is now a loud cry in India about swaraj. Several eminent statesmen are of opinion that great changes will be made in the constitution of the British Empire after the end of the war. The leaders in the Colonies are deeply considering how to improve their condition further. It is the opinion of the President of the Congress that will be taken by the English public to be the opinion of the Indians regarding this question. Mr. Ambikacharan Muzumdar is not so bad as Sir S. P. Sinha or Rash Behari Ghosh. Still, if he does not make a strong and definite stand about swaraj, the Indians will really regret for having chosen him as the President.

Indians and the Revenue Board.

36. The Hindu Nesan, of the 6th October, takes exception to the appointment of Mr. Couchman in the place of Mr. Gillman in the Revenue Board, and observes:—It has become quite natural for an Indian to become even a member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Madras, but an Indian still finds it impossible to become a member of the Revenue Board. This appointment is reserved for the Indian Civil Servants, and the Provincial Civil Servants have never been allowed to get it. When these latter are able to discharge the duties of a District Collector satisfactorily, they cannot be considered to be unfit for being members of the Revenue Board. In connection with a resolution moved by the late Mr. Raghunada Rau in the local Legislative Council in 1910 that capable Indians in service should be promoted HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

as members of the Revenue Board whenever an opportunity occurred, Sir Murray Hammick stated that there was no bar to Indians becoming members of the Board and that, if there was no Indian in the Board, then it was because there were no Indians in the higher ranks of the Indian Civil Service and the Provincial Civil Service at that time. It is now six years since this sympathetic statement was made and there are now three Indians in the Collector's grade. So it is really regrettable that the Government has not thought it advisable to appoint one of these Indians to the present vacancy in the Board. But for the present war, the report of the Public Service Commission should have been published by this time and an Indian would perhaps have been appointed to the Board as a matter of right. Anyhow, seeing that there are three Indians in the Collector's grade, the Government could have appointed one of them as an acting member, pending the publication of the report of the Public Service Commission. We cannot approve of the action of the Government in ignoring the claims of the Indians when suitable opportunities like this occur.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 6th, 1916.

The last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council.

37. In commenting upon the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Prapanchamitran, of the 6th October, says:—One of the questions asked at this meeting was whether India would be represented at the economical conference to be held after the war, and it was stated in reply that the Prime Minister in England had himself given an assurance that India would be represented in it. This question was quite unnecessary, as Reuter has already communicated this news to us. We wish the question had been asked whether a non-official Indian would represent India at this conference, for it would have helped to clear a doubt in the minds of the people now as to the nationality and position of the representative of India at this conference. One question regarding the right of the Railway Companies to reserve a compartment for Europeans and Eurasians, elicited the reply from the Government that it could not believe that the Indians disliked the existing arrangement. Are not the many cases now pending before courts as a result of the altercation between Indians and Anglo-Indians on account of the former trying to get into compartments reserved for the latter sufficient proof that the Indians resent the reservation? How can a Government which is not prepared to believe what is actually happening be expected to have faith in arguments? The reply to the question about the delay in the delivery and withholding of telegrams was not satisfactory. The Censor is acting as he likes in the matter of transmitting news. Even ordinary telegrams which have no relation whatever to war are withheld by this officer and there seems to be no one to check him. On the whole, the replies of the Government to the majority of the questions asked at this meeting were not satisfactory.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 7th, 1916.

Indians employed in steamers.

38. Referring to a resolution passed at the Labour Conference in England that, as it was dangerous to employ in mercantile steamers Asiatics, who were to be had for low wages, all Chinese, who could not prove themselves to be British subjects should be sent back to their country, the Swadesamitran, of the 7th October, says:—We protest against the statement in the above resolution that it is dangerous to employ Asiatics in mercantile steamers, as the term Asiatics includes Indians who are employed in these steamers as lascars, etc. It is announced loudly that the present war has helped to strengthen the friendly feeling between the Indians and the people living in other portions of the empire and to create in the minds of the latter a love for and confidence in the former. The question is how far does the wording of the above resolution show such love and confidence.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

The Industrial Commission.

39. Adverting to the inability of Sir H. Plunkett to join this Commission on account of illness, the Hindu Nesan, of the 9th October, suggests the nomination of Rao Bahadur Mudholkar in his place.

40. Referring to the desire of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford that the Viceroy's powers of nomination to the Imperial Legislative Council should be enlarged, the Andhrapatrika, of the 7th October, says:—

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 7th, 1916.

The Viceroy's powers of nomination.

Sir William Wedderburn suggests that the Viceroy's powers of nomination to his Executive Council, and not to the Legislative Council, should be enlarged. But we do not believe that the members of the Indian Civil Service will easily allow the suggestion to be carried out. The suggested change will be a step forward towards India's independence, and will ultimately lead to the Legislative Council being transformed into an assembly consisting solely of the representatives of the people. We earnestly hope that the Government will appreciate the suggestion of Sir William Wedderburn.

41. Referring to the letter of Sir Harry Johnston on Imperial Federation published in the New Statesman, in which he outlines a scheme for the future Government of India, and suggests among other things that the British rulers should affirm the self-government in home affairs of all the Native States in India, and should subdivide the British territory and rearrange it into provinces of more uniform size and perhaps greater number, the same paper says:—It is doubtful if even an Indian leader could put the case so very clearly. Sir Harry Johnstone richly deserves our thanks for showing real British heart. By giving great prominence to the question of Indian representation in the Imperial Federal Parliament and to that of the rearrangement of the Indian provinces, he has suggested a complete solution of the Indian problem. We suggest that if ever the British Indian provinces are to be reconstructed, it will be well to do so on the language basis.

NEW STATESMAN, Madras, October 1916.

India and Imperial Federation.

42. In commenting on the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. C. Y. Chintamani as President of the United Provinces Conference, the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th October, says:—The President's utterances regarding the desire of the Indians to place India on an equal footing with the self-governing Colonies of the Empire, deserve the careful consideration of our western brethren, especially our bureaucratic rulers. We have not been asking for self-government as a reward for the services rendered by India in the present crisis. We have been praying for it for a very very long time. In helping England, the Indians have not been actuated by any commercial motive. The Colonies have expressed the desire to be admitted into partnership with Britain in the government of the Empire. If this privilege is granted to them, India which is now a dependency only of England is sure to become a dependency of the Colonies also. From what has happened in South Africa and Canada, it is evident how much love the Colonists cherish for the Indians. If we sit quiet in a corner today, our future will be most insupportable. This is just the reason why we, who have been agitating for self-government for long, now pray for it with greater force.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 9th, 1916.

The United Provinces Conference.

43. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th October, says:—Hitherto there used to be only two Collectors in the Madras Presidency who were not members of the Indian Civil Service. It is now announced that this number has been raised to three. It is curious that this announcement has been made while the Madras public has been demanding the appointment to the Revenue Board of a person who is not a Civil Servant. The authorities should see that it is useless to grant very small concessions at a time when great boons are asked for.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 10th, 1916.

Further privileges.

44. The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th October, institutes a comparison between the Madras Presidency and the other provinces of India in respect of Post offices provided by the Government, and says that, as in other respects, this province falls far behind the others in this respect also. It then observes—Within the limits of the Madras Presidency itself, the postal facilities afforded to the Telugu districts are much less than those afforded to the Tamil districts. While the eleven Tamil districts contain 1,607 Post offices, the eleven Telugu districts have only 1,101 Post offices. Viewed from the point of population and extent also, we have less post offices than those in the Tamil districts. Again, if we take into consideration the strength of the establishments in the several Post offices in the Tamil country serving crowded localities, it is no exaggeration to say that, from the point of view of population, the Tamil districts enjoy twice the facilities while from the point of extent, two and a half times the facilities that the Telugu districts enjoy. It is curious that though the Telugu country in the Southern Presidency is first in extent and population, it is the last in respect of the postal facilities enjoyed by it.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Oct. 8th, 1916.

The Presidentship of the Indian National Congress.

45. Writing on this subject, the Mysore Star, of the 8th October, observes:—Babu Ambika Charan Muzumdar gets by far the largest number of votes at the final election by the All-India Congress Committee. At the last session held at Bombay, the President was Sir S. P. Sinha—a Bengali. At the session last held at Madras, the President was Babu B. N. Basu—also a Bengali. At the forthcoming session, too, the honour of being the President goes to a Bengali. Considering the situation in which we find ourselves at present, the wisest course seems to be to elect a person who is held in equally high regard by the Government as well as by the people. It would not do to have a president of pronounced extremist views, nor would it do to have one whose words are mild and softer than butter. Mr. Muzumdar, the President-elect, has taken an active part in the work of the Congress ever since its birth. He is a great patriot and a thorough student of politics. He has not yet had the honour of being President of the Congress. Now that he has won that honour, we may hope that he will discharge the duties which it implies in a manner which is welcomed alike by all classes and communities.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, Oct. 11th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 11th October, also makes the same remarks in regard to the President-elect, and adds that his resolution at the session of 1893 on the separation of judicial and executive functions was unanimously accepted by the congress and that although he is somewhat advanced in age he has all the vigour and activity of a young man.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 7th, 1916.

The press under the Press Act.

46. In an article in English reviewing a book on the Press Act by K. Vyasa Rao, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 7th October, says:—"It has been the experience of the world that our enemy is our best friend. The Press Act has been a blessing to India. We are now drilled not in a school but in a college of adversity. Those who are trained in adversity are bound to get on very well in prosperity. For the last six years, we have made great progress in journalism. We have learnt how to write without outstepping constitutional limits. . . . . If we learn to know how to obey the Government, if we learn how to place our grievances before the Government for redress, redress we are bound to have. The art of representation is a difficult one. But the Press Act teaches us most effectively how to represent our case successfully. We, therefore, do not agree with Mr. Vyasa Rao that the Press Act is a curse to India. We look upon it more as a blessing than a curse. We have in Mysore a press regulation which, in the language of the Viceroy, was the most stringent, ever devised by an evil genius. This press regulation has been of great service to us. And in the fulness of time, it will be seen that it is a blessing in disguise."

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 10th, 1916.

47. Referring to the memorandum submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy by a majority of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Keralodayam, of the 10th October, says:—We see amongst the signatories of the memorandum in question three ex-Presidents of the Indian National Congress and three such of the All-India Muslim League. Yet inasmuch as the memorandum has been prepared without the knowledge of the people in general, it is no wonder that they look upon it with suspicion. The Indian Legislative Councils, especially the Imperial Legislative Council, cannot be said to be institutions which represent the people in the true sense of the word. Considering the present system of electing members to these assemblies and other matters, it is doubtful whether even the non-official members thereof can be regarded as true representatives of the people. Such being the case, it was not proper on the part of these non-official members to have submitted such a memorandum without having previously made sure what public opinion on the subject was. Possessing no knowledge of its contents, we are now unable to say more on the subject.

The working of the Arms Act.

48. In reviewing the report on the working of the "Arms Act" for 1914–15, the Monorama, of the 10th October, regrets that, in spite of the enormous damages caused by wild beasts to cattle and agriculture in Malabar, the authorities should have thought fit to reduce the number of licenses granted for the possession of guns during the year under review.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 10th, 1916.

Our future hopes.

49. The Qaumi Report, of the 30th September, in continuation of its articles on this subject, writes:—Hindus during the time of their rule prior to the advent of Muhammadans were quite ignorant of political and national service. During their regimè high offices were given to those whom the Maharaja favoured most. No Hindu inhabitant was even acquainted with the terms personal and political rights. They regarded their king as the master of their lives. Muhammadan rule, however, changed all this. The Hindus became vigilant once they were admitted to the Darbars. They were consulted in political and national matters, special duties were entrusted to them and, as they were placed in responsible positions in the Government, their eyes were opened. They began to seriously think about their rights and as a result of the practical knowledge gained, they now claim freedom, liberty and equality, otherwise their moral code would, in consequence of caste restrictions, have kept them in their respective places. No relatives could stir from their own places and no man could be the equal-to of another, but Muhammadans liberated them from this bondage, gave them places with themselves and taught them that the land belongs to God and that we more or less hold it in trust.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

Now observe how the Hindus have treated us in return for the consideration we showed them. They consider us polluted and refrain from touching us. They have not even taken the trouble to understand the tenets of our faith, nor have they acknowledged the benevolent treatment extended to them by us. Have you ever seen or heard of a Hindu showing the same respect to our buildings and books as the Europeans do even to this day? Have they ever acknowledged our royal bounty, or admitted the scientific favours they received at our hands? Have they published any book in appreciation of our benevolent acts? Emphatically no? The fact is that both Europe and India are our pupils and debtors, but the Hindus are decidedly faithless and evil-minded.

Our future hopes.

The Qaumi Report, of the 1st October, in continuation of its previous articles on this subject, writes:—What was the state of India when the Muhammadans assumed the reins of Government? It will be sufficient for the purpose in hand if we glance at the history written by Babar just four centuries ago in which he describes the state of India as he actually saw it. From the incidents indelibly engraven on the pages of this history it is clear that the Mussalmans spread civilization and culture and clothed men with the garment of humanity. But today these things are forgotten. There are now some Englishmen also labouring under the impression that it was they who lit the torch of civilization and culture in India. The ancient history of Britain affords proof positive of the fact that this error is due to ignorance, and that it is Islam that lit the torch of civilization in the continent of Asia as well as in most of the countries of Europe. It was Mussalmans who first sacrificed physical comfort in order to bring about reform and progress in QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Oct. 1st, 1916.

India. Were not those services extraordinary and should not our claims on that account be extraordinary? How can we be content with ordinary rights? How can we be satisfied with co-partnership in the political affairs of the country? We are accused of being backward in education and political knowledge. The reason is that we are poor and have lost all our acquired wealth. We have been kept down by the pressure of the treatment we have received from the country and the idea, which we entertained at first that our salvation lay with the Hindus, has now proved to be false. They have begun to throw obstacles in our way and to compel the Government to grant them equal rights with Muhammadans. But in the time of the present ruler, we should not be unmindful of our status that we are not altogether subservient but are former or ex-rulers.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Oct. 3rd, 1916.

A foul slander on Mughal rule.

50. The Qaumi Report, of the 3rd October, writes:—"The Hindustani Press, Punjab, has brought out a foul publication entitled 'The Mughal Rule in India.' Every leaf, every page and every word of it irritates the feelings of Muhammadans. The Muhammadan Emperors and their harem are foully accused of spending their time in pleasure and winebibbing. It goes so far as to prove that Aurangzeb was a drunkard. The original was written in English by Satoria Domger, but it never obtained great publicity nor gained immortal fame. Now the paper called Hindustan has published a Hindustani translation and is widely advertising the work.

"This book which is a figment of the talismanic imagination of Satoria Domger's evil mind is a libel on enlightened historians. How unjust and wicked it is that after the lapse of centuries a non-Muslim should write a history of the Mughal period inferior to the stories in a Sunday Magazine. Is it a small injustice on the part of the author and the translator to have ignored the political and social conditions of their own country, to have endeavoured to wound the feelings of the Muhammadans and while living in a glass house themselves to dare to cast stones at the passers-by?

"The Mussalmans of the Punjab are justly expressing their displeasure at the appearance of this Muslim Tormentor. Our esteemed contemporaries the Kasan and the Pīsa Akhbar have invited the attention of Government to the necessity of the immediate confiscation of the book.

"If the Government which desires to hold the balances of peace even in this country and shows great zeal in confiscating pamphlets and newspapers that contain articles inciting to rebellion, should take no notice of this disgusting book and make no effort to counteract the evil effects produced on people's minds by the poisonous germs of the original work and the translation thereof, we are afraid that the atmosphere of unity and concord will be polluted.

"Whoever may be the author or the translator of the book the Government should consider the legal aspect of the question and see what can be the object of such a publication.

"After referring to the result of the Secretary of State's practical support in the publication of the original work, the editor invites the attention of the Muslim League to the matter and asks it to take the necessary steps to bring the matter to the notice of the Government, and hopes the Muhammadans of Madras will bring the matter before the Government by convening meetings in every district and thereby support the cry of anguish raised by their brethren in the Punjab."

III.—Legislation.

Keralodayan, Trichur, Oct. 10th, 1916.

The Patna University Bill.

51. The Keralodayam, of the 10th October, points out that it is clear from the speech of Sir Sankaran Nayar, when introducing the Patna University Bill, that he was in no way responsible for it, which from the view point of the Indians contains many an obnoxious provision, and that it was wholly a creation of Sir Harcourt Butler, but hopes that it will be passed into law only after the necessary changes have been made in it.

IV.—Native States.

52. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th October, welcomes the order of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore directing the Mysore Representative Assembly to meet twice hereafter in the year and observes:—The people's representatives requested that the privilege to propose resolutions might be granted to them, that votes might be taken and recorded in budget discussions, that the term of membership might be extended to three years, and that the election rules might be made more liberal. But it does not appear that the officers of the Government had given any satisfactory reply. We trust that the Maharaja and the Diwan, who are liberal hearted in other respects, will consider the above demands favourably.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Oct. 10th, 1916.

Referring to the increasing popularity and influence of the Mysore Representative Assembly, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 9th October, writes:—In his address to the assembly this year, the Diwan was able to point to the many schemes and projects which have taken definite shape. The establishment of a University for Mysore and the Kannambady Reservoir Project are the crowning acts of His Highness the present Maharaja's regime. The Chamarajendra Technical Institute, the Bangalore Mechanical Engineering School, the factories for the extraction of oil from sandalwood, for milling rice. for the manufacture of jaggery, the pumping stations, the organisation of home industries, workshops, the compulsory education scheme and the scheme for village sanitation, all point to His Highness the Maharaja's inordinate regard for popular welfare. This many sided progress may be taken as the result of the assembly's prayers and suggestions during the last 36 years. If His Highness were to grant all the reforms urged by the assembly, the Government would have become Ramrāj or ideal Government. Now that at least a few of them have been carried out Mysore has come to be regarded as more democratic than any other Native State and its people happier are considered than in British territory.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Oct. 9th, 1916.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 11th October, dwells on the great joy with which the people of Mysore hailed the recent announcement that the Representative Assembly will be accorded the privilege of meeting twice a year.

Sampad Abhyudaya, Mysore, Oct. 11th, 1916.

53. In an article giving a summary of the proceedings of the Co-operative Conference held at Mysore, the Mysore Star, of the 8th October, observes:—Mr. Chakravarthi's presidential address will form a most interesting handbook tracing the origin, history and gradual growth of the co-operative movement in India. The address also contains numerous statistical details, and furnishes in a concise form valuable matter which ought to be studied by every one who has any interest in the movement. We are proud to see that the details regarding the number of societies in each province and the amount of share capital, the number of members and the extent of transactions of each show that Mysore takes the first place in many of these respects. The address points that the reserve fund of the societies in Mysore is less than that of the societies in other provinces, but the amount representing the share capital of the societies is the highest in Mysore. While Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas who was president last year had some difficulty in imparting his views to the conference owing to his want of acquaintance with the vernacular, our President Mr. Chakravarthi this year, although he belongs to Bengal, had the advantage of having a sufficient knowledge of Canarese to enable him to discuss freely at the Conference on the various aspects of the movement. The success of the co-operative movement in Mysore is as thorough as the success of this conference itself and is largely due to the high organising capacity and unceasing efforts of Mr. Narna Ayyangar, who is at the head of this department and of his assistants. With a wider knowledge of the benefits of the movement, we may hope that the people of Mysore will be able to keep themselves free from debt and meet all their local wants in respect of education, sanitation, etc.

The Co-operative Conference, Mysore.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Oct. 8th, 1916.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore, Oct. 11th, 1916.

Dasara festivities in Mysore.

54. In an article under this heading, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 11th October, reproduces the remarks made by the Vrittanta Patrike on the same subject (vide Report No. 41, article 66) and likewise refers to the dangers of improvidence among the people as a result of the facilities created by the co-operative societies for borrowing at a low rate of interest.

The paper next observes that the length and variety of the subjects presented for discussion by the Representative Assembly made it impossible to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion in regard to them, and consequently the discussion served no purpose hitherto, but now that His Highness has granted the privilege of holding a second session every year, the Representative Assembly will be better able to discharge its functions. The paper adds that the grant of this privilege shows how eager His Highness is to associate popular leaders with the administration of his State.

VRITTANTA PATRIKA, Mysore, Oct. 12th, 1916.

The Diwan's address to the Mysore Representative Assembly.

55. The Vrittanta Patrika, of the 12th October, in a leading article, writes:—We are glad to see that the Diwan's address to the Representative Assembly in Mysore shows that considerable progress was affected in almost every direction in spite of the situation created by the war. It is laudable that despite the difficulty experienced in the matter of getting proper materials from abroad, our Government has been contriving to keep up its activity, and it is a matter for sincere rejoicing that the revenues of the State and the general situation are in a very satisfactory condition. We are exceedingly glad that the Diwan is beginning to realise the need of overhauling the administrative machinery and of rendering the Government more popular. Prompt attention to the wants and wishes of the people must doubtless conduce to their peace and well-being. In many a department of Government, the numerous reports and returns required of them have naturally led to a degree of slackness and inattention in regard to their more legitimate duties of a routine nature. The Government would do well to impress upon its officers the necessity of being more courteous and kind to the people and of inviting their co-operation in all matters of reform instead of forcing these reforms on them. We would urge that the programme which the Diwan has drawn up should be speedily carried out. At present only 4 per cent of the children go to school. This percentage should soon go up to ten. To do this, it is not necessary to introduce the element of compulsion. If only schools are established wherever there is need, and if kindly and enthusiastic teachers are found to manage them, there will be students eager to benefit by them. The income from agriculture now stands at Rs. 24 per head. This should rise to Rs. 45 The average income which now stands at Rs. 31 should rise to Rs. 60. To this end, the Government ought to further popularise improved methods of agriculture. It is gratifying to see that the Government are paying increased attention to the subject of utilising the natural resources of the State. Enterprise such as the extraction of oil from sandalwood will do much to promote the industries of the State. In this connection it must be remembered however that it would not do to imitate other countries blindly and start the same industries as they have. Every enterprise should be proceeded by a thorough knowledge of the natural resources and of local conditions and requirements. If these words of caution are kept in mind, the glory of our province will be both great and lasting.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 12th, 1916.

The Mysore Parliament in miniature.

56. In an article in English under this heading, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 12th October, observes:—"Monday the 9th of October 1916 will hereafter be regarded as a red letter day in the political and administrative annals of Mysore. The gracious royal rescript read by the Diwan announcing the holding of another session of the assembly every year is the second 'Magna Charta' of Mysore, the first being the order of His Highness the late Maharaja Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar Bahadur of revered memory. The importance of the step taken at present by His Highness, our beloved Maharaja, cannot be overestimated. It is an act of the highest and broadest statesmanship and of the deepest political grace and clemency. We consider the institution of a regular second session every year as a great and marked advance in the political privileges of the people. . . . . We may now venture to prophesy that in the rejuvenated Representative Assembly lie the germs of the future Parliament of Mysore. With the growth of the Representative Assembly, it will serve the same purposes which the Parliaments of western nations have been doing. It was Lord Dufferin, who in his felicitous speech, compared the Native Princes of India to the Monarchs of European Kingdoms. We go a step further and assert that our Sovereign and his ministers are animated by the same feelings of lofty statesmanship and desire to raise the people which animates Sovereigns and statesmen of such progressive countries as Japan, etc. The names of Sri Chamarajendra Wodeyar Bahadur and his illustrious son Maharaja Krishnaraja Wodeyar Bahadur and of Rangacharlu and Sir Visvesvaraya will stand for ever inscribed in glorious letters for all time to come in the hearts of the millions of the people of Mysore and of all thinking and patriotic Indians in the whole of India."

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The Madras Mail on the Kannambady Project.

57. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 11th October, writes:—The Madras Mail contains a leading article taking exception to the remarks of the Diwan Sir Visveswarayya in regard to the Kannambady Reservoir Project in the course of his address to the Representative Assembly. But the Mail's observations are hardly to the point. They reveal its distinct partiality towards Madras. Our Diwan has shown in detail how Madras is a gainer and Mysore a loser by the award on the Kannambady Reservoir question. The Mail is unable to meet his arguments. It is impossible to attack Mysore on this question. Mysore has generously abandoned her own rights in favour of her sister Madras. The fact that in spite of this magnanimity on our part, the Madras Mail has thought fit to condemn us shows how even wise and learned men become perverted when they are seized with the demon of selfishness. In the same article the Mail hints that Sir Visveswarayya is attempting many impracticable things. It adds that Mr. Banerji will shortly be the Diwan and that in fact he has the Diwanship already in his pocket. Mr. Banerji has come here only for two years. It is not true that he has the Diwanship in his pocket, nor does he cherish any such designs. He is still very young. On the retirement of Sir Visveswarayya, only after Sirdar Kantaraj Urs has had his turn of Diwanship, if Mr. Banerji is without anything equally good at the time, and if His Highness the Maharaja wishes to obtain his services, and the people of Mysore are also willing to have him, he may be raised to that position. We have reason to affirm that, except under these circumstances, Mr. Banerji has no chance of Diwanship. During the seven years of his Diwanship in Cochin, Mr. Banerji has not shown the slightest trace of selfishness in him. He has conducted the administration with a sole eye to justice. We have great regard for Mr. Banerji's extraordinary ability and statesmanship. It would, therefore, be wrong to suppose that he seeks to step into Sir Visveswarayya's place.

Writing on the dispute regarding the Kannambady Project a correspondent of the same paper, subscribing himself a "Patriot", observes:—The Diwan has now confessed that the decision is unfavourable to Mysore in its result, although he nevertheless holds that Mysore has won in point of principle and has therefore to feel grateful to the Government of India. We fail to make out what he meant by saying that Mysore has won her contention, although the net result of the award will not lead to any profit to Mysore. Mysore can be said to have won, only if she considers that the gain of the British Government is her own gain, and that there ought to be no conflict of interests between Madras and Mysore. Although Mysore with her characteristic generosity is willing to rejoice in the good fortune of her Madras brethren, it is curious that Madras should look her gift horse in the mouth and find something to complain about.

SUJENA MITRAM, Cochin, Sept. 27th, 1916.

58. The Sujena Mitran, of the 27th September,* draws attention to the prosperous condition of the finances of Baroda, and to the great strides made by her in every direction, especially in education, and observes that the other Native States will do well to follow in her footsteps.

Administration of Baroda.

V.—PROSPECTS OF THE CROPS AND THE CONDITION OF THE PEOPLE.

MUKHBIR-I-DAKHAN, Madras, Oct. 4th, 1916.

59. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 4th October, referring to the marginally-noted subject, says:—"We think if our country does not now take advantage of the generous endeavours of the Government it will be very difficult to manage things. In our country next in importance to education stands the commercial problem. For in India commerce is not entirely in the hands of indigenous traders, but most rich English merchants are sharers with us in this department of activity and although in trade rivalry is permissible, we cannot hope to succeed until we solve with the fingers of organisation a few knotty problems. To permit neglect in ourselves and then to seek Government aid is a vain endeavour. We know our country is rich and productive, that our productions are excellent and that a plentiful supply of labour is procurable on the spot. All that we need is a man capable of laying out our capital on sound principles and establishing trade relations with foreign countries. All European countries have advanced, more or less, through commerce and their actual existence depends upon trade. The secret of our own success lies here and without it (commerce) we cannot advance a single step along the stage of progress."

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. The following appears in New India of the 20th October:—"We hope that the British Government will not extend conscription to Ireland. It is useless to take unwilling men by force and make them soldiers. Such soldiers will be more a source of danger than of help to the Empire. Give Ireland her promised Home Rule and her sons will flock to the standard, as they have ever done. Recruiting, Mr. Redmond said in the Commons, had gone down since the Coalition Government was formed. Let Government trust Ireland. Truly, then, all would be well."

Conscription in Ireland.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

2. New India, of the 20th October, writes:—"We draw the prominent attention of the Indian public to a brief article, in the current issue of the Commonweal, under the heading 'A Flaming Signal of Danger.' The writer has analysed the statistics relating to crime in India for the decade ending 1913, the last year for which figures are now available, and the following conclusions are drawn:—

The growth of crime.

New India, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

(1) Crime has increased in the decade by 20 per cent, and the increase is most astounding in the second quinquennium.

(2) The proportion of acquittals has been increasing, and whereas prior to 1907, a larger number of persons brought to trial was being convicted, now more than 50 per cent are acquitted.

(3) Madras heads the list in the proportion of crimes to the population. The so-called backward Provinces like United Province and Central Province show a far better record.

(4) Among the different types of crime, those affecting the human body show the largest increase. These four facts make it quite clear that the situation has become very grave in the matter of crime. To make it still more alarming, we know that the increase has been in spite of a heavy increase in police expenditure. We spend more to maintain the police and the Courts, acquit a larger number of persons brought to trial, either because there is not adequate evidence justifying a conviction or because the wrong man has been placed in the dock. That is certainly not a development which we can view without misgivings. We do not know what explanation the official expert has to give on the subject; perhaps he will repeat that crime is better reported to-day or that the police are more handicapped in the discharge of their duties by the absence of popular co-operation. That, to our mind, will hardly satisfy any impartial critic; at any rate, it is an admission that the existing system is not efficient. Whatever the expert's reasons be, we think the public should note the increasing gravity of the situation, and make a serious effort to stem the growth of greater insecurity to life in the country. From what we have been able to gather from provincial reports, the situation has grown worse during the last two years; and that adds to the urgency for a full consideration of the problem."

(b) Courts.

3. New India, of the 18th October, writes:—"It would not be wise to comment on the six judgments delivered in the Madras High Court this morning until I have them before me. The net result is: that the Magistrate's order demanding security is illegal, but the High Court cannot interfere as his act is administrative; I have a civil remedy by action—Acting Chief Justice and Seshagiri Ayyar, J.; Ayling, J., dissenting. That some of the articles come within the Press Act, Ayling, J., sweeping in all but one, I think; the Chief Justice and Seshagiri Ayyar being far more liberal.

New India case.

New India, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

"Home Rule may be advocated, but the manner of the advocacy is all-important; dryly put, it depends on the Judge whether it is held to come within the Press Act or not; it is all a matter of discretion, and the editor must take his chance. The High Court may declare an order illegal, but cannot cancel it, where it is under the Press Act. As the Chief Justice said 'the keeping of printing presses and the publication of newspapers becomes an extremely hazardous undertaking in this country'.

"The suit will, of course, be brought as quickly as the law permits, and will seek to recover the Rs. 12,000 at least, as these securities are declared to have been illegally taken. If not won on the Original Side, it will pass to the Appeal Court and thence to the Privy Council I shall also seek leave to appeal on the question of the ultra vires of sections 23 and 4, which place the High Court in the undignified position of declaring an order illegal, but confessing its impotence to annul it.

"Meanwhile let us not lose heart because of a defeat expected from the first. If we had won, it would have shown that we had exaggerated the badness of the Press Act. As for the passages condemned, we know, from all the past history of the struggle for liberty, that the verdict of history on the fighters reverses the judgment of the Law Courts of their day; we know that in any free country no one would have dreamed of condemning them—far fiercer things are daily written in England—and the fact that they are here penalised only proves our contention that India is not free.

"ANNIE BESANT."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 18th October, says:—"Judgment was delivered today by the High Court in the Appeal and Revision cases filed by Mrs. Besant in respect of the security which had been deposited for New India and ordered to be forfeited by the Madras Government. The Appeal and Revision Petition have both been dismissed. Keen disappointment would be felt by the Indian community all over the country at this result and there would be proportionate rejoicing in Anglo-Indian circles. . . . . The decision of the Madras High Court follows that of the Calcutta Court in rendering the Executive Government practically uncontrolled arbiter of the destinies of the organs of public opinion. Many of those who had watched the course and nature of the arguments at the hearing before the Court, would not, we think, have felt that the conclusion which the learned Judges have now come to was an inevitable one. The result of the case shows what a grave blow to the freedom of the press in this country can be inflicted by means of the Indian Press Act. We must reserve further comments to a future issue, when we have got full details of the judgments."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 19th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 19th October, observes:—"Mrs. Besant's case will not help those of us who urge the repeal of the Press Act; for the finding of Their Lordships is that her criticism as contained in specific articles exceeds the limits of fair comment and is calculated to bring the Government established by law into hatred and contempt. All the Judges are of the same opinion as regards a number of articles. The question is thus decided on the merits. We could not have desired a stronger bench, and Mrs. Besant was treated with every consideration by Their Lordships. They allowed her every freedom of argument, every chance of refuting the case against her: and their decision, arrived at after a patient hearing in the course of which the appellant was given the privilege of urging every point in her favour, is entitled to the greatest respect. Their Lordships themselves, we are inclined to think, showed the utmost concern to interpret the law as favourably as they could in favour of the liberty of the press, and yet they did not find their way to absolve the appellant.

"There can be no doubt of Mrs. Besant's absolute loyalty to the Crown and the British connection. But Government established by law in British India is different from both; and Their Lordships have come to the conclusion that several of the articles, for the publication of which Mrs. Besant is responsible, contain words which have a tendency to bring the Government established by law into hatred or contempt. They also find that some of the articles contain words which are calculated to bring certain classes of His Majesty's subjects into hatred or contempt. . . . . Mrs. Besant has published articles which few Indians would knowingly venture to publish. Her aim may have been to set a high standard of freedom; and probably, if she had succeeded in her appeal, many imitators would have been found. Her attitude towards the Government has been frankly hostile. . . . . We regret that Their Lordships should have had to come to a decision against the freedom of the press. But they were interpreting a law, and not making it. They certainly interpreted every point that they could in favour of the appellant; and they found nothing more that was favourable. Mrs. Besant went beyond not only the limits of fair comments but against the limits of prudence, in charging Government with personal hostility to her. It is one thing to say that the Government is wrong or perverse or foolish; but it is another and quite a serious thing to attribute evil and vindictive motives to Government. It is not right to charge the Madras Government with blind hostility to New India or to Mrs. Besant as being the prompting cause of their action. There can be no doubt that much of her writings against Government is the result, not of disloyalty, but of bad temper. The attitude which she was accustomed to maintain in the Esoteric section of the Theosophical Society is the attitude which she sought to introduce into public life. She got angry with all who did not obsequiously follow her lead. She quarrelled with those who differed from her. As a result it became impossible for Mrs. Besant, as a critic of Government, to be in peace with it; and India cannot afford, especially at this time of war, to follow the lead of Mrs. Besant who is not guided by a higher inspiration than her own. We believe that she is really animated by the desire of raising the status of India politically; but there is along with this a strong infusion of vanity which has increased as she has felt that her influence has increased."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 19th, 1916.

New India, of the 19th October, states:—"The High Court of Madras has followed the High Court of Calcutta in declaring an order made under the Press Act to be illegal and in declaring also its impotence to set it aside. For the second time in a few years a Local Government comes into direct conflict with the High Court, to the manifest injury of law and order within the territory it governs. . . . . The highest Court in the Presidency declares that an action which leads to the seizure by the Government of a subject's money is illegal, but that it is prevented from doing justice by an Act passed by the Supreme Legislative Assembly. High Court and Local Government are in conflict.

"Thus a serious scandal is created, the administration of justice being hampered by the Government, and that not in an emergency but by the carrying out of a statute. . . . . It is poor consolation that the Government by these sacred promises persuaded the Indian members to give them the powers they asked for, and that the promises all fly down the winds The Judges are bound by the words of the Act, and cannot consider the pledges in virtue of which it was passed. Legally or illegally, security is imposed and forfeiture follows. This is the predicament in which their Advocate-General has landed the Government. It wins by an illegality. The very foundation of their whole procedure is an illegal action, vitiating all that follows. But none the less, the High Court is powerless, and the petitions are dismissed.

"It is obvious that such scandals should not be allowed to recur, and the Press Act which makes such conflicts between High Court and Government should be repealed by the Indian Legislature, and to remedy past illegalities —be declared to be ultra vires by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Only in this way can future scandals be prevented, injuring the dignity of the High Court and Government alike. At the same time we cannot but regret that the High Court, which was sitting, not under the Press Act, but in the exercise of its own powers, did not exercise those powers for the protection of the subject, leaving Government to do as it pleased. Such a judgment, proclaiming the supremacy of the law, would have sent a thrill of joy and pride through India; the people would have felt that the law was strong enough to protect them against illegal seizure of property by the Government; the party which is striving for law-abiding reform would have been enormously strengthened, whereas now the anarchists will taunt us with the jeer: 'Your much vaunted law is helpless before the force of Government.'

"It is cold comfort to be told that the keeping of a press and the profession of journalism are hazardous (except for Anglo-Indians). We knew that already, and had hoped that our High Court would have diminished the hazard. A great opportunity was offered to it, the Judges having full discretion—as was shown by their varying opinions—and we had hoped that that discretion would have been exercised to lessen the dangers to which the Indian press is exposed, and to enable it to discharge its functions—so important to the country—by some intelligible rule, instead of by risking its fate in the lottery of the varying discretions of High Court Judges. From such a Bench we had hoped for this, and our disappointment is keen, and will be shared by the whole Indian press. . . . . With a law so bad and so uncertain, entailing financial ruin by the protection of illegal orders from the jurisdiction of the High Court, there is only one remedy to resort to, and that is repeal. It is wholly mischievous; the ordinary law of sedition and abetment is enough to protect the Government, and the ordinary law of libel suffices to protect the individual. It arouses indignation by its uncertainty, and deep and sullen resentment by the partiality of its use. It makes a cleavage between Anglo-Indian and Indian, between the free and the fettered press. The Madras Mail may attack and is untouched, while the answer of New India is penalised. The Mail may incite hatred and contempt against the Indian nation, but to defend the people of the land is perilous. Such results can only cause widespread discontent which, not allowed to express itself, will spread beneath the surface, and be a constant menace to the stability of the State."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

New India, of the 20th October, has the following:—"New India is grateful to the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar for his complete understanding of its policy and aims. . . . . It is practically impossible to edit a daily paper, and never to let slip a passage that would be better away, and it is a cruel law which seeks to destroy a good paper for such slips here and there. We can say now that the two letters incriminated ought not to have appeared. 'Ave Cæsar' shows the difference of opinion possible: Sir William Ayling lets it pass, yet this good and kindly Judge condemns it. Extract 11 is strong, but only strong language will awaken Englishmen to what is done here and make them see it as foreigners see it; an arrest on warrant for a specified accusation is no wrong, though the man be innocent; the police descents in Calcutta are very different, and the Criminal Investigation Department are paid out of our taxes. Extract 13 was, we think, justified under the circumstances. But we cannot complain that the Judge thought otherwise, since he did not feel justified in construing the all-embracing words of the Press Act as Mrs. Besant suggested. The truth is that no paper attacked under the Press Act can escape, and all we can do is to use the law to the utmost in resisting its every application, until it is removed from the Statute Book."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The Government and the law.

4. In a leader under this heading, New India, of the 20th October, says:—"We republish on another page the admirable article in the Hindu on the High Court decision on the Magistrate's order. It rightly points out that the situation created is an intolerable one, as intolerable to the Government, we may add, as to ourselves. For the Government is placed in the position of having illegally forfeited New India's security, and the Magistrate in that of having committed two illegal acts in imposing the securities of Rs. 2,000 and Rs. 10,000. The obviously right thing to do, under such conditions, was to quash the order, as making the proceedings bad from the beginning, and to have pronounced on nothing further. Section 4, enabling forfeiture, was consequent on section 3, and the forfeiture thereby became illegal. The Government, having forfeited the security which ought never to have been imposed, had no right to go into the further question of the merits or demerits of its selected articles, and the Court should have pronounced no judgment on them. . . . . But while it would have been better both for the Government and for Mrs. Besant if the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar had agreed with Justice Sir William Ayling that the Act of the Magistrate being a decision founded on evidence was a judicial one, it is better for the Indian Press that the decision should be mixed as it is. For it shows how the Press Act itself is hopelessly bad, providing for illegalities on the part of Magistrates and Governments—illegalities which the Courts proclaim but do not redress, leaving the victims of the illegalities to a long and costly remedy— a remedy, moreover which is practically unattainable by any poor and little-known editor. The public pays Mrs. Besant's securities and supplies her with funds for the legal contest, and she has the best legal assistance free of cost. But what could be done by a helpless editor, equally wronged ?

"The only remedy is to get rid of the hastily constructed Act, which gives rise to such dilemmas and injustices. And on the imposition of securities, as radically mischievous, our readers may note the apposite quotations in the Hindu from Professors Sidgwick and Dicey. We believe that the Press Act will end with this case, when we ultimately reach the Privy Council."

Litigation in the Madras Presidency.

5. The Hindu, of the 20th October, writes :—"Lord Islington made a statement about the people of India during the discussion of the Government of India (Amendment) Bill by the Joint Committee, which was as untrue as it was libellous. It needs a rare hardihood to characterise a whole people as being fond of litigation, and yet His Lordship, whose only experience of India was gathered during his busy tours as President of the Public Services Commission, warned the committee with a surprising want of official reserve that the vast majority of Indians show such delight in litigation that the omission to upset the decision in the moment case by the legislature might open up a great deal. . . . . The sting in Lord Islington's fling at Indians lies in the unjustifiable assumption that a good part of this litigation is frivolous and perhaps vexatious and without sufficient strength in fact to support them. In refutation of this obnoxious theory, we would cite the authority of the figures, so far as Southern India is concerned, given in the statistics of Civil Courts in the Madras Presidency for the year 1915, just received by us. From the report it appears that the total number of suits instituted in the Presidency in that year was 555,020, the highest figure reached so far. There has certainly been very marked increase in the total number, but, as the Hon'ble the Judges remark, the increase has occurred almost entirely in suits for money or movables due partly to the war, and arising from the general desire among creditors to realise their dues."

Hindu, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The Indian Institute of Science

6. The Hindu, of the 16th October, writes :—"As an instance on the one hand of the growing appreciation by the additional members of the power and usefulness of well-considered interpellations, and, on the other hand, 'the increasing cleverness of the members of the Viceregal Council to ride off troublesome hecklers,' the Capital, of Calcutta, cites the following interpellation and answer relating to the Tata Institute of Science at Bangalore, at the last meeting of the Imperial Council. . . . . We should have thought that Sir Sankaran Nayar would have shown cleverness not in riding off 'troublesome hecklers' but in redressing the grievances of which the hecklers are the exponents. The reply given by him to the interpellation is, it must be confessed, distinctly disappointing. The Hon'ble Sir Fazilbhoy Currimbhoy's question voiced the deep and widespread dissatisfaction felt in this country regarding the Indian Institute of Science. It is an indisputable fact that the promotion of practical scientific knowledge and the utilization of the same in the development of Indian industries is a very important purpose to be achieved at the present time, and to the question of the Honourable mover whether it is satisfactorily achieved by the institute, as by all accounts it is not, it is not an adequate answer to say in general terms that the object of the institute is 'not limited in the manner which the Honourable Member's question would seem to imply,' and it is too early to judge whether it has successfully attained its objects since its opening in July 1911. . . . . The unsatisfactory condition of the institute has been exposed in these columns since 1913, what was to a considerable extent matter of general knowledge. . . . . The institute is not a Government institution, but it is surely a public institution in the management of which the representatives of the Imperial and Local Governments as well as of the Mysore State are given a direct interest and connection. . . . . What strikes us as also curious is the attitude of indifference, as far as we can judge, displayed by the Mysore Government whose representatives are on the managing body The institute is at its very doors and it is in a position to greatly benefit the people of the State. A local Anglo-Indian contemporary is not apparently pleased with his activities in that it characterises the present Diwan as possessing the reputation of starting hares in every direction without there being much chance of anything coming of the pursuit. The objects and benefits of the institute are such as must specially appeal to an administrator of his calibre and capacity and deserve all the attention which he can devote to them."

Hindu, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

ANDHRA ADVOCATE, Visagapatam, Oct. 8th, 1916.

7. The Andhra Advocate, of the 8th October *, has the following:—

The Vizianagram Municipality.

"We regret we cannot congratulate the Municipal Council, Vizianagram, on the election of its Chairman in Mr. V. Somasundara Rao Pantulu. For some reason or other, sometimes obvious and sometimes shrowded in mystery, the election of the Chairman of this Municipality has not been giving satisfaction to the rate-payers for a long many years past. It is sometimes said that the irresistible influence of the fort is brought to bear upon the majority of the Councillors. The Samasthanam is the heaviest tax-payer and in many ways the municipality is indebted to the samasthanam. The influence of the fort can thus be explained and justified, and if this is rightly made use of it can be welcomed. But our readers are aware of the social evils with which some influential quarters are impregnated and on account of which life at Vizianagram is degenerating. . . . . We do not mean to indicate that any questionable influences were had recourse to in the last election, nor have we any authenticated information about the nature of the manœuvres adopted in the election, but we are in the position to assume that the result of the election did not give satisfaction to the average rate-payer. We thus say that we cannot congratulate the Council on the result of the election. We hope, however, that Mr. Somasundara Rao will, by his administration, give satisfaction to the people. The previous Chairman, Mr. Mantha Suryanarayana Pantulu, did what he could to discharge his duty honestly and at some sacrifice of his lucrative practice. We feel glad that he, to an extent, belied our prognostications of him and we congratulate him thereupon."

* Received on the 17th October 1916.

The Cochin Municipality.

8. The West Coast Spectator, of the 12th October, observes:—"The administration report of the Cochin Municipality for the last official year is a record of lack of public spirit and demoralisation which seems to have over run the rate-payer and his representatives. The Council has a majority of non-officials, but they take little or no interest whatever in the administration. . . . . None of the elections were contested. What more evidence is wanted to show that the Cochin public is totally unfit to discharge the functions of citizenship and for self-rule? If the franchise is not totally removed, it must be attributed to the generosity of a forgiving Government. . . . . Backward in everything, it is not surprising that education under the ægis of the Council was far from satisfactory. They got a grant for opening a girls' school, but there was no attempt to utilise it. Registration of vital statistics was defective, the birth-rate was below the normal, while the death-rate, providentially, decreased. The Divisional officer points out that the sanitation of the municipality was always defective, which, he says, cannot be improved unless a good supply of drinking water is secured. Another trouble is over the disposal of night-soil which is now thrown into the backwater creating thereby considerable nuisance and trouble. The progress in the expenditure of special grants is still lamentably slow, says the Collector in his endorsement, and he points out works that ought to be completed without further delay. . . . . On the whole, we are constrained to remark there has been no progress whatever in local Government in Cochin, and if it has not deteriorated abnormally it must be attributed to the check exercised by the local officials. So long as the public shows a lack of interest in civic affairs this must continue. We think it would be better to stop altogether the farce of local self-government in Cochin and entrust the business to a single individual with a freer hand."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 12th, 1916.

Writing further on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 14th October, says:—"In our last issue, we dwelt upon several deplorable aspects of civic life in Cochin. A further proof of the stagnation in 'lokil sluff' in that unenviable town is that nobody cared to effect the sale of a single one out of 100 packets of quinine imported in view to anti-malarial measures. We are now seriously told that this quinine experiment is not to be repeated. Our only wonder is how an experiment which had really not been tried can possibly be repeated."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 14th 1916.

The Cochin Argus, for the week ending 14th October, remarks:—"Time was when an intelligent and sustained interest in their civic affairs was a source of pardonable pride and satisfaction to the citizens of Cochin, but in recent years, things have sadly altered for the worse. Cochin has indeed become almost a byeword of reproach and contempt among civic bodies in the land. Divisional and District officers write disparagingly of the manner in which our municipal administration is carried on, Inspecting officers find themselves compelled to report in equally uncomplimentary terms, while, year after year, the Government review of our Municipal Administration Report is a combination of damning with faint praise and a sorrowful denunciation of the absence of any signs of civic penitence and reformation. . . . . Municipal administration in this town, we need hardly say, is not of the nature of child's play. It presents so many complex and withal interesting and practically useful problems for solution that the prevalent apathy towards it on the part of a community, which, happily, cannot be stigmatised as deficient in intelligence and perception is really difficult to understand and explain. . . . . We are not so carping as to say that nothing was done in the way of progressive administration last year, but the facts and figures in the report are themselves mournful evidence that the currents moved very sluggishly and that opportunities went largely to avoidable waste.

"Practically throughout the review year, the Chairmanship was filled by Rao Sahib A. L. Shirgoakar, and it is but fair to him to say that he discharged a difficult and almost thankless task with his accustomed zeal and diligence. No Chairman, however, can be expected to achieve much in the absence of efficient and adequate co-operation, and this asset, unhappily, has become extremely scarce in Cochin. . . . . Cochin has, indeed, cause to lament the evil days upon which her civic administration has fallen. She has a great commercial and industrial future in front of her, but if she is to be ready to fill with dignity and benefit the larger status, as a great port of the Empire, for which she is destined, it will be for her citizens of to-day to shake off the lethargy that weighs them down and rise to a proper sense of the duty they owe to their now sadly ill-used town."

Cochin Argus, British Cochin, Oct. 14th, 1916.

WESTERN STAR, Trivandrum, Oct. 12th, 1916.

Madras Arms Act administration.

9. In a leader on this subject, the Western Star, of the 12th October, says:—"We cannot possibly bring ourselves to perceive the least political or practical wisdom in the agitation for the complete reversal of the present Arms Act policy of the Government of India. No doubt, in theory, it is fair that a free people should be free to exercise their freedom. Therefore, in theory, the people of this country, living under the flag of freedom, ought to be free, among other things, to possess and bear arms for self-protection and for the protection of their properties and belongings. It all appears very simple and plain in theory, but, in this practical world, theories are often calculated to do harm rather than good. . . . . In the Madras Presidency a politically sane and level-headed population has shown that it may be safely trusted not to abuse the right or privilege of possessing or bearing arms for the legitimate protection of life and property. There are, however, other extensive areas in India, where evidence is unfortunately not at all waning to show that the free and unrestricted distribution and possession of arms would very quickly be attended with the most disastrous consequences. . . . . All this shows that, in areas like Bengal, the reversal of the present policy would be the height of folly on the part of the Government. . . . . The repeal of the Arms Act is not to be seriously advocated, but a more liberal and sympathetic administration of the existing laws and regulations appears to be called for in the interests of the Government and the people alike. At present, too much is left, it is to be feared, to the idiosyncrasies of individual officials. The worst is, however, that these idiosyncrasies mostly tend in the direction of restricting the issue of licenses rather than in a more liberal distribution, determined by the actual requirements of the localities concerned."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

Indian reforms.

10. Referring to the memorandum sent to His Excellency the Viceroy by the non-official Members of the Imperial Legislative Council, suggesting political reforms after the war, Mrs. Besant writes, as follows, in New India of the 16th October:—"The spirit of the India Office, since Mr. Austen Chamberlain was pitchforked thereinto, is but too well known in India; he has never cared to claim a single day in the House of Commons for the discussion of Indian affairs since he took office, and this, with the defeated attempt to smuggle into an amending Bill the deprival of the right to sue the Secretary of State for wrongs alleged to be committed by him, shows his attitude towards the unfortunate country of which he is the chief autocrat. By the action of the representatives of the people in the Supreme Legislative Council, he has at least been compelled to listen to the demands made by India as to her future Government, and these demands, to all intents and purposes, cover Home Rule, though the word is not used. The fact that these demands are made in such fashion, with such swift grasp of an opportunity, and such boldness of speech, shows the metal of which our representatives are made. They reflect the new spirit in the country, and there is no 'bated breath and whispering humbleness' in their tone."

Writing on this subject, the Wednesday Review, for the week ending 18th October, says:—"We have not much faith in miracles in Indian polity being worked after the war is ended. We are unable to credit it with any power to effect a wholesale transformation in the character and condition of the country, as some ardent patriots amongst us seem to imagine. We do not expect that our condition after the war will present a miraculous contrast to what it was on August 4, 1914, as a result of the war. Beyond vague notions of new angles of vision, whatever they may mean, nobody appears to be precise as to what the war is going to do for us. . . . . It looks as though we are pursuing a mendicant policy in basing our claims for larger political rights on our services in the war. That is not in keeping with our national self-respect which will certainly be very much enhanced, if we heard less of what are called, after-war problems. The problems are already there, and war or no war, they have to be solved in a way which would be in keeping with the spirit of England's mission in India. . . . . Attacks upon the bureaucracy and uncomplimentary references to it have become the fashion and are so common that it is not worth while to analyse the attacks. We should at least expect honourable members of the Viceroy's Council to rise above the common cry and in the interests of logic at any rate to avoid contradicting themselves. At the outset they say 'the people of India have good reason to be grateful to England for the great progress in her material resources and the widening of her intellectual and political outlook by the British rule and for the steadiest, if slow, advance.' In the same breath they continue, 'Commencing with the Charter Act of 1833 up to 1909, the Government of India was conducted by a bureaucracy almost entirely non-Indian in its composition and not responsible to the people of India.' And yet the self-same bureaucracy has been responsible for the great progress in the material resources of India and for the steadiest if slow progress for which the honourable members have thought fit to voice the gratitude of the people of India. What is more, it is this bureaucracy which has given to us friends like Sir Willian Wedderburn, Sir Henry Cotton, A. O. Hume and several others whose names have become household words in this country. . . . . One should think that good government will always be acceptable to a people, and Indians can be no exception to that rule. British rule has been acceptable to the people because it is good. Otherwise it would have gone the way of other European Powers who sought to establish their supremacy here. People of India want good and efficient government above all, and arguments advanced for government of any other description are specious and do not reflect the wishes of the best minds of the country."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Oct. 18th, 1916.

The following appears in New India, of the 19th October:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 19th, 1916.

"Where is it?

"We take the following from The Empire:

Thus the Bengalee on the "reform" demands:

There must be real trustfulness and real partnership. There have been real trustfulness and real partnership in the war and hence we are entitled to have them in peace.

Where is the trustfulness regarding the internments?

We do not know what answer our friend the Bengalee is going to make, but we might ask a few pertinent questions in response to this Anglo-Indian impudence: Where is the trustfulness regarding Arms Act and Indian Volunteers? Where is the trustfulness regarding the Boards of Revenue, where no Indian is appointed? What kind of trustfulness is it which brings into being Seditious Meetings Act and Official Secrets Act? Where is the trustfulness when the Criminal Investigation Department is kept alive? No—the Government do not trust the people."

Indians as Medical officers.

11. The Indian Patriot, of the 17th October, observes:—"Perhaps the most striking feature of the interesting report which the Honourable the Surgeon-General has issued on the working of hospitals and dispensaries in this Presidency during the last year is the frank acknowledgment that the entire department was practically run by Indians. The report bears on it no mark of inefficiency on account of the absence of the Indian Medical Service officers. . . . . Indians asserted that they could hold their own with the Indian Medical Service men; there were many among practising doctors who had European training. They had no opportunities. The Civil Assistant Surgeons, men of excellent education and high proficiency, were allowed to stagnate at the very depths. Their salary was very low; and they had no facilities to employ their knowledge. Major operations were the exclusive privilege of the Indian Medical Service men. . . . . Yet, in spite of these disabilities, the subordinate medical service has brilliantly rallied to the call of responsibility. They have gallantly borne, upon their shoulders, the work for which Europeans used to be paid ten times their salary. And the Honourable the Surgeon-General has been able to write a record of the working of his department in which there is no trace of any inefficiency due to the absence of the Indian Medical Service. More operations were performed last year than in any other year and with a less number of Indian Medical Service men. The record of work done by the Subordinate Medical department is a standing monument of their efficiency and knowledge. That they should not have opportunities in the service is a distinct loss to the public. It would be cruel, indeed, if after the war, the return of the Indian Medical Service officers should result in the old status quo, namely, the Civil Assistant sliding into the hewer of wood and the drawer of water in the department."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 17th, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

12. In a leader under this heading, New India, of the 18th October, says:—"No better case could be made out for the cause of Home Rule for India than a comparison between the conditions in England before the first great Reform Bill of 1832 and the present condition of India in the year of grace 1916. It is well known how, a few years previous to 1832, a number of reactionary statutes were expunged from the Statute Book, notably the prohibition of Trades Unions under the Combination Law of 1797, and the enactments directed against Non-Conformists and Roman Catholics. These were the first signs of the coming change, and are paralleled in 1916 in India by the agitation against the Press Act, an agitation which sooner or later must be successful, and by the foreshadowing in the Joint Committee of the attitude of the Houses of Parliament towards a large number of Acts of the Supreme Legislative Council, an attitude of which we hope full advantage will be taken by every Indian who has the welfare of his country at heart. . . . . One of the most vital influences in bringing about the Reforms of 1832 was the French Revolution of 1830, which finally put an end to the idea of the Divine Right of Kings and of the imperishable right of governance in the aristocratic and privileged classes. . . . . In the great European war we have our 1916 counterpart of the French Revolution of 1830, with its subsidiary movements in various parts of the continent of Europe. This great war has destroyed for ever the idea of the inferiority of the coloured races of mankind, the first fatal blows having already been struck at the time of the Russo-Japanese War. The Indian is now known to be the equal of the European in warfare, as he has been known, since the time of Max Müller, to be his equal in the domain of literature and philosophy. . . . . The French Revolution shattered some of the most cherished principles of the ruling castes of Europe, although they were by no means aware of the destruction of their idols at the time. Similarly, the European war has shattered the idols of the bureaucracy in India, for even now the Indian has behind him the irresistible force of the heroism of thousands of comrades who have fought and died that India might be free. The bureaucracy may yet be unaware that its day is gone; the Indian heroes may little realise how much more they fought for than they knew. But future generations will judge the war of 1914 as the present generation judges the French Revolution of 1830—and both will be seen as landmarks on the road leading to the freedom of the world."

1832 and 1916.

13. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 18th October, observes: — "We desire to congratulate Mr. Jinnah on his nomination to the presidency in the next session of the Muslim League. . . . . He is a stalwart Congressman who is a Muslim Leaguer, because he believes that the league has served its purpose and must sooner or later merge itself into the Congress. It is singular that while the Muslim League has of late been going in for Presidents who are decidedly pro-Congressmen and Unionists, some of the so-called Hindu leaders with the help of a foreign lady are adopting separatist tactics. But the separatists are few in number. Though in the pages of New India the separatist movement represented by the Home Rule League is a powerful one, not so it is in actual fact. At the first anniversary of the Home Rule Day which was got up to give an opportunity to Mrs. Besant to define her present views on Indian politics, we were told not a single Indian leader was present, and except for the Adyar folks and the students of Madras, the meeting was of no significance."

14. New India, of the 19th October, has the following:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 19th, 1916.

"The Bombay Order.

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Besant.

"For the first time the order of the Governor in Council, excluding me from the Bombay Presidency, causes some inconvenience and public disappointment. In February last I promised to preside at Akola over the Central Provinces and Berar Provincial Theosophical Conference in November. To reach Akola—or Amraoti, where the meeting is now called—I have to pass through Bombay Presidency, unless I take the long round viâ Calcutta, a four days' journey. So I have cancelled the engagement. I am sorry for the public disappointment but it is caused by the Governor of Bombay, not by me. The order also prevents my going to England, unless I go by the Cape, since Aden is within His Excellency's jurisdiction. I do not intend to give His Excellency the opportunity of sending me to gaol with or without hard labour and fine, as he has threatened to do, if I step within the Presidency over which he rules. In order to avoid misconception let me add that I do not regard His Excellency with either hatred or contempt. On the contrary, I regard him with profound pity, as an Englishman who has misused against a faithful subject of the King-Emperor a power entrusted to him by His Majesty to defend him against his enemies. On such misuse, the verdict of history is sure.

One advantage grows out of the above; it sets me free to attend the important meetings of the Benares University on the dates which I had reserved for Amraoti. I shall be glad to be present at these, as matters of serious concern may arise.

"ANNIE BESANT."

15. New India, of the 20th October, states:—"We are surprised to see after the statement of Lord Loreburn on the Defence of India Act, that His Excellency the Viceroy has rejected three petitions from men condemned to death under it. An irremediable penalty should not be inflicted when the Tribunal that gave the sentences is probably acting ultra vires. Surely it would have been wiser to hold the men in gaol, until the legality of the sentences is proved."

"Defence of India Act."

16. The Indian Patriot, of the 20th October, remarks:—"The annual returns of the Civil Hospitals and Dispensaries in the Madras Presidency, compiled by the Honourable the Surgeon-General, comes to remind us of the utter inadequacy of medical relief in the Presidency, and of the helplessness to improve it. The number of hospitals and dispensaries almost remain the same. Their advance is slow and out of all proportion to the requirements. We still read of dispensaries being closed in rural areas for want of doctors; and the promise that the Government would be willing to find one half of the charges for the establishment and maintenance of hospitals and dispensaries has not attracted any large number of private philanthropists. During the last year, private non-aided institutions were less in number than the year before last. . . . . There is no one to recognise that medical relief is in a woefully backward condition. Ideas have not sprung up as to how their backwardness can be cured. We go along, and in the course of the aimless drift we come across non-official members moving resolutions which are stifled by the official majority. How can we increase our hospitals ? The question must be answered. Money must be found. If we cannot find enough qualified men, we must increase our colleges. The easiest way, of course, is to take advantage of the existing indigenous agency and organise it, but the Government have not taken a single step in this direction. We are more anxious, however, that the sick should have medical relief than that the indigenous systems should be encouraged."

Inadequate medical relief.

Mysore administration.

17. The following appears in the Karnataka of the 14th October:—"The Dasara of 1916 has been rendered truly memorable by a few events of far-reaching importance; but among them will hardly be included the address delivered by the Diwan to the current session of the Representative Assembly. Viewed as a record of administrative reform and achievement,—which it was meant to be by the founders of the Assembly,—the address is a disappointing performance. It contains nothing to show that the present Government has adequately recognized the shortcomings and needs of the humdrum departments and is anxious to remedy them. The discontent among the subordinates of the Revenue and other branches of the general public service, the morale of the Police, the delay and perfunctoriness in the administration of justice, the soullessness of school curricula and the heartlessness of school masters, the malpractices of public servants, these and such other details of the routine of Government have, as in previous years, escaped all notice."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

Pudukkōttai State.

18. The Indian Patriot, of the 18th October, writes:—"The report on the administration of Pudukkōttai last year describes the steady progress of this little State, with an area of 1,178 square miles and a population of over four hundred thousand. Although a Native State, and under an Indian Prince, Pudukkōttai has been under Civilian rule all these years. The Superintendent of the Council is a Civilian, and the Council has besides the Diwan and a Councillor. The Raja's health would not permit any long stay in the State, the climate driving His Highness to Europe or Australia. In the year under report His Highness and the Rani—an Australian lady of excellent education and large outlook as her stay in Pudukkōttai showed to a loyal people—remained for nearly four months. The striking feature in the report of the Superintendent is the proud statement that 'the revenue of the Darbar has been steadily increasing under most of the principal heads'."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

19. In speaking of the Ceylon Government's Bill relating to money-lending, the Lokaprakasam, of the 16th October, dwells upon the hardships of the borrowers in India, and advocates the passing of a similar measure here.

20. The Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, of the 11th October, referring to the Reuter's telegraphic report regarding the question of raising a further loan of three hundred million pounds asked for by Mr. Asquith in the House of Commons, says that probably most people will be staggered at the announcement that such an enormous sum is required. But it is hoped that they will soon realise that this amount is of no great significance when regard is had to the magnitude of the war itself. According to Mr. Asquith's statement "this war is an endeavour to rescue weak kingdoms from the clutches of the tyrant and to decide once for all that it is unlawful for a powerful kingdom to oppress a weak one."

"The hardships of the war."

Mukhbir-i-Dakhan, Madras, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The editor, referring to this huge figure of three thousand one hundred and thirty-two million pounds as the actual war expenditure incurred by the British Government alone apart from large sums spent by the Allied Powers—France, Russia, Italy and Japan, etc.,—observes: "We should not be afraid of it, but courageously endeavour to draw the moral conclusion that we should undertake a fair share of this expenditure which the British are incurring on account of the war. We are, indeed, proud that India has contributed more than her share towards the expenditure of the war, and that even now she is ready to render further aid should occasion require it.

"Indian rulers have opened their hearts and very generously contributed towards the expenses of the war; and among these His Highness the Nizam of the Deccan has played a noble and generous part as is evident from the recent Budget Note by Mr. Glency, Assistant Minister of Finance."

21. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 13th October, referring to the views expressed and plans adopted by the General mentioned in the margin who has recently been dismissed from Military Commands, says:—"This much may be gathered from the General's expressed ideas that at present the condition of Germany and Austria is becoming critical. The Germans are not left undisturbed at any point by the severe attacks made by the Allies. If similar attacks be made by the Allies with a little more intensity and if our British forces continue their activity on Somme the remnant of the German forces will very soon fall back and take shelter behind their own German walls.

22. A correspondent to the Prapanchamitran, of the 13th October, under the nom de plume of Narada, writes:—Mrs. Besant is raising a hue and cry against the conduct of the Criminal Investigation Department officers. What is the use? Mr. Arundale, the Secretary of the Home Rule League, writes a long article detailing how he is shadowed by these officers, and how they behave towards those coming to him. Who is going to enquire about it? These Criminal Investigation Department people have been "let loose" upon the world by the Government to do as they like. I am also constantly teased by these men. But I always keep within myself the conduct of the secret police.

DESAM ATA, Rajahmundry, Oct. 11th, 1916.

23. A correspondent to the Desamata, of the 11th October, says:—In Burma, there are certain mean-minded Andhras who having taken from this country prostitutes, and having also fraudulently prevailed upon honourable women to leave their homes here for Burma, are selling them there in private auction and thus earning a living. Stipulations regarding these women may be seen taking place in the very vessels that sail from the ports of the Andhra country, so much so that respectable men going to Burma with their families are obliged to embark at Madras or Calcutta. I trust that the officers of the Criminal Investigation Department and our leaders will co-operate in putting down this evil.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

24. The Lokopakari, of the 16th October, writes:—The condition of education in India cannot be said to be satisfactory. There are not a sufficient number of schools in India; nor do those, who are educated in the colleges here, obtain complete education. Their education is considered by the authorities to be complete only after they undergo an additional course of instruction in England. There are no colleges in India like those in England. The British Indian subjects do not have even as much facility in the matter of education as is enjoyed by the subjects of Native States. The percentage of young men having education in Mysore among the whole population is 25½, while the same percentage in British India is only 3. The reason for this great disparity is that primary education has been made free and compulsory in 27 districts of Mysore, and the Maharaja has sanctioned the introduction of such education in 41 districts more. If the same policy is followed in India too, the Indians will have greater facilities of education, which will in turn increase their earning capacity. In Japan, with a population of 53 millions, the number of boys having primary education is 7,100,000. But in British India the population of which is five times that of Japan, only 6,500,000 boys are having primary education. All these things prove clearly that India can rise to the level of other countries only if it obtains swaraj. But some people say that she is not at present fit to have swaraj and that she will become fit for it, only if she improves in her education, industries and trade. Our own opinion is that she will very soon rise to the position of other countries in the world, if, without being made a field for the training and aggrandizement of Englishmen, she is governed in the interests of the Indians. As long as this is not done, there is no meaning in the statement that she is not fit for swaraj.

Condition of education in India.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

25. Referring to the proposal before the Madras University to hold a B.Sc. degree examination in addition to the other examinations, the Hindu Nesan, of the 18th October, says that the introduction of a new examination will increase the burden on the Indian student, who has already a sufficient number of examinations to tackle with; and suggests that the present B.A. (Honours) examination and degree may conveniently be called the B.Sc. examination and degree, if the Senate of the Madras University is so enamoured of this new name.

The B.Sc. degree examination.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

26. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th October, remarks that while, on the one hand, some Indians are sparing no pains to advance the cause of the vernaculars, there are, on the other hand, some other Indians and a few Europeans interested in safeguarding their authority, who strongly support the contention that it is not possible to give any prominent place to them.

The vernaculars.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

27. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th October, says:—In the next meeting of the Senate of the Madras University, Mr. Ramalinga Reddi will move that when an Intermediate candidate fails in the examination, he may be allowed to appear the next time for the examination in those subjects only in which he was plucked. Say what Mr. Rollo or the University Syndicate may, the country groans under the Intermediate slaughter. The proposal of Mr. Reddi will, if accepted, give some relief and we hope that it will be accepted.

The Indian Educational Service.

28. Referring to the large number of Europeans in the Indian Educational Service drawing very high salaries, the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th October, reports the Herald to have said:—It is very much to be regretted that while men of talents like Dr. Bose, Dr. Ray and their disciples, and Professor C. V. Ramana are available in India, Indians are deemed unfit for the Indian Educational Service. A certain young man, whose mathematical and other attainments have attracted the notice of the Educational authorities in England, was asked by his professors to try for an appointment in the Indian Educational Service. He did so, but he was declared unfit. There is an instance of this kind in the Madras Presidency College. An Indian who came out in the first class in every examination in Madras and Cambridge and obtained the research scholarship is still in the subordinate Provincial Service. The Proclamation of Queen Victoria says that India will be administered without distinction of race or creed. The Government of India are treating this as a scrap of paper. England is indifferent in this matter. The Indians hope that she will soon shake off this indifference, and do them justice.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

(e) Local and Municipal.

Non-officials as presidents of municipal corporations.

29. The Hindu Nesan, of the 13th October, approves of the suggestion of Mr. Branfelt, a Commissioner of the Calcutta Corporation, that the senior elected Commissioner may be appointed to act for Mr. Payne, the official President, who is going on short leave, and says:—When the leave is only for a short period, we do not see any harm in an elected Commissioner being appointed to act as President, nor do we see any necessity for an official being chosen for the place. After all, the official who is made to act takes up the appointment only as a raw man, as far as the particular duties of the post are concerned, and by the time he learns the new work, he has perhaps to go back to his original appointment. It is not creditable to the Government, while proudly professing to have granted the privilege of local self-government to the people, to insist upon appointing only an official as the President of a metropolitan municipality, even for short vacancies. We hope Lord Carmichael will view the suggestion of Mr. Branfelt in a liberal spirit, and appoint a non-official Commissioner to act for Mr. Payne during the period of his leave.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The Guntūr municipality.

30. The Aryavysia, of the 5th October, invites the attention of the Collector to the unsatisfactory state of the roads of the Guntūr municipality, and requests him to see that they are not encroached upon by the people and that the road traffic is not obstructed.

ARYAVYSIA, Guntūr, Oct. 5th, 1916.

The powers of municipalities and local boards in regard to primary education.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Oct. 13th, 1916.

proceeds to close a school. This implies that the views of the Educational officers shall be respected, and thus it practically puts an end to the existing restriction that the Board shall never act contrary to the wishes of these officers. The Boards will no longer be under the mandate that they shall appoint a particular person to an office or shall open a school in a particular place. We congratulate Sir Sankaran Nayar on his high liberality and courage of conviction in entrusting the local bodies with full powers in these matters. We must not omit to mention, however, that these newly-acquired powers require to be exercised with great prudence and tact, as we all know the dangers which food may cause to a starving man when he can have his fill.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The Cochin municipality.

32. In reviewing the report on the administration of the Cochin Municipality for the year 1914–15, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 11th October, points out that the facts that most of the elections were uncontested, that the Government had to resort to nomination in filling up two vacancies in the Council and that one of the Council meetings had to be adjourned for want of a quorum, show clearly that the people and the Councillors do not take any interest in civic affairs, endorses the remark of the Collector that the night-soil should be removed early in the morning between 6 and 7-30 a.m., and regrets that the efforts of the Government to supply the town with pure drinking water have not so far been crowned with success.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The Calicut municipality.

33. In reviewing the report on the working of the Calicut Municipality for the year 1915–16, the Manorama, of the 13th October, congratulates the municipality on the sound condition of its finances notwithstanding the existence of the war, but deplores the enormous expenditure, of over twenty-three thousand rupees, already incurred in filling up the Dhobies' tank, which, with a considerably smaller amount, could have been improved and made useful to the public. It thinks it necessary to make arrangements for the distribution of medicines among the poor free of cost, endorses the opinion of the Collector and the Government that the roads are not yet in a good condition, and invites the attention of the Chairman to the fact that streets are not properly lighted in several places.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Oct. 17th, 1916.

The Calicut municipality.

In commenting upon the report on the administration of the Calicut municipality for 1915–16, the Kerala Patrika, of the 17th October, endorses the opinion of the Collector that the system of patching up the roads here and there is a useless one, and his and the Government's view that the sanitation of the place is not yet in a satisfactory condition, for the improvement of which, however, it suggests the construction of more public latrines and street-gutters. As regards the filling up of the Dhobies' tank, the paper makes remarks similar to those of the Manorama of the 13th October, and concludes by drawing attention to the keen interest taken by the Collector Mr. F. B. Evans in the affairs of the municipality.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 18th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 18th October, writes in a strain more or less similar to the above, and adds that the municipality should have bestowed greater attention on vaccination.

The Cochin, Tellicherry and Cannanore municipalities.

Cochin in municipal affairs.

34. The Kerala Patrika, of the 17th October, also reviews the reports on the working of the Cochin, Tellicherry and Cannanore municipalities, and draws special attention to the apathy of the people of British

(g) Forests.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

Forest administration in India.

35. The Swadesamitran, of the 12th October, reports the Indiaman, a paper in England, to have stated that, in India a large extent of forests was being administered by the Government only for the benefit of the people, and that it was the lack of interest taken by the people in this administration that was responsible for the continuance of some defects in it, and observes :— It is true the forests are administered by the Government only for the benefit of the people. But how can they be blamed for not taking an interest in it, when they are not in the know about the particular advantages they derive from the forest administration. Perhaps this paper is not aware of the constant cry of the Indian politicians that the produce of Indian forests may be used for starting many industries here and that the administration of the forests by the Government is not beneficial to the people. We are glad, however, that the paper admits that India is poor, and that the enormous quantity of material available in the country is not utilised to her best advantage.

(h) Railways.

36. Referring to the question of the construction of Arsikere-Mangalore line, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 13th October, in a leading article, observes that although the grievances of the district of South Canara are numerous and what may be called "chronic," it would not be right to argue that they are less urgent on that account. The paper next says that the absence of a link with Mysore by means of a railway, so as to give increased facilities for the conveyance of ghat products to the coast is one of the principal grievances of the district of South Canara, and, if perchance, Mysore should pitch upon any port outside the district, such as Bhatkal or Tellicherry, all the trade which the district now carries on with the interior, despite the difficulties arising from the absence of a railway, would be diverted to the district which gets the new harbour to which Mysore may construct a railway. The town of Mangalore may have to share the fate of Kumta which lost nearly all its trade on the construction of the harbour at Marmagoa and the distress which the people of South Canara may have to suffer, in consequence of their being deprived of their trade with Mysore, which they have been carrying on for hundreds of years, will be very great.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The grievances of South Canara.

37. Referring to the Kollengodu-Trichur Railway, the Manorama, of the 17th October, regrets that the proposed railway is not, according to the present plan, to run through Alathore, which is a town of some importance, and hopes that the Collector, who is expected to visit the place shortly, will enquire into, and do the needful in, the matter.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 17th, 1916.

The Kollengodu-Trichur Railway.

(k) General.

38. The Swadesamitran, of the 12th October, and the Hindu Nesan, of the 13th idem, express their satisfaction at the Government having cancelled this deputation and decided to depute another civilian as well as an Indian to inquire into the grievances of the Indian coolies in Ceylon.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916, AND HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The deputation of Mr. Todhunter.

39. The Hindu Nesan, of the 13th October, reproduces the following comments of the Pioneer on the way in which the right of interpellation given to the members of the Legislative Councils is being exercised by them :—This right of interpellation is a very important right But considering the questions asked by a member at the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council, it looks as if the Honourable Members have not yet understood what questions should be asked by them. A member asked to be informed how many third-class tickets were sold daily on the average for the last five years in the Madras Central and the Egmore Railway stations. There is nothing surprising in the reply of the Government that it could not furnish the information. Even regarding some other questions, apart from the trouble involved in preparing the necessary replies, they cannot be said to refer to very important points and to have been approved by the people. Then again the replies to certain questions asked by the members are already found in records published by the Government, and if the members concerned had taken the trouble to go through these records, they would not have put these questions. If all the members begin to ask such unnecessary and useless questions, the Government will have no time to attend to other matters.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

Swaraj and Swadesi.

40. A correspondent of the Prapanchamitran, of the 13th October, writes:—It is very necessary that those, who are dreaming of swaraj day and night, should understand the real meaning of Swadesiism and act upon it. Why should those, who are inclined to buy and use foreign goods, when local goods are available, wish to have swaraj? If we use only indigenous goods, will our money be taken away by others by crores? If we encourage Indian industries by going in only for local articles, will thousands of our men proceed to foreign countries annually for purposes of living and get into the clutches of men, who have not a grain of sympathy in them? If we do this, why should thousands of our people starve, not having even half a meal a day? Those natives of this country, who buy and use foreign goods, are not the true sons of mother Bharata; they are traitors to her. These have no right whatever to claim swaraj. Will New India, which has taken the brief for those who demand swaraj, publish this in its columns? Will the members of the Home Rule League bind themselves to use only swadesi goods?

MAHAVIKATADUTAN, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

The poverty of India and Home Rule.

41. A correspondent of the Mahavikatadutan, of the 14th October, writes:—Even according to official statistics, the average annual income of a man in Great Britain is £333, in Canada it is £193, in South Africa it is £100, and in beggarly India it is £9½. While this is the case, how can the Indians live a happy life and satisfy all their wants? But, even in the existing circumstances, we can adjust our expenditure to our income, if we had a control over both. When all matters connected with the revenue of the country is in the hands of foreigners, how can we make any adjustment? This is why we are demanding swaraj. Poverty and riches are never permanent. Our aspirations too will be fulfilled.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

The maligning of Indian character by Anglo-Indians.

42. The Lokopakari, of the 16th October, says:—The Anglo-Indians are maligning the Indians in England as they are doing in India. The British public believe the wrong information given to them about the Indians by the Anglo-Indians and the Missionaries and deem the people of this country to be uncivilised men. So it is necessary that some of our leaders should proceed to England in batches for the purpose of delivering a number of lectures there about India and her people, so as to remove the misconceptions in the minds of the Englishmen. It is only then that better times will dawn on India.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Oct. 16th, 1916.

The hardships suffered by passengers proceeding to Ceylon.

43. The Vidyabhanu, of the 16th October, details the hardships still suffered by the Indians proceeding to Ceylon, and suggests the appointment, by the Madras Government, of a committee consisting of two or more gentlemen from this Presidency and the same number of gentlemen from Ceylon to inquire into the grievances of the Indians, and says that it is not desirable to allow this long pending problem to hang fire still.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

The New India appeals.

44. The Swadesamitran, of the 18th October, thinks that the judgment in these appeals dismissing them will no doubt be received with regret and disappointment by all the people, and reserves its detailed comments upon these judgments until after they are published in full.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

Monegars, Guntūr district.

45. The Andhrapatrika, of the 12th October, commends to the consideration of the authorities the memorial of the monegars of the Guntūr district complaining against the proposal to abolish their office, observes that they left the villages of their birth and settled themselves in the villages in which they now are, relying on their appointments and are of great help to the other village officers, and prays that they may not be thrown out of employment.

Home Rule Leagues.

46. The Kistnapatrika, of the 30th September, says:—It is very much to be regretted that in the eleven Telugu districts only a few Home Rule Leagues have been established. Who will not feel ashamed to hear that no league has as yet been founded in Ellore, to which place the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has brought so much credit. In Nellore the Hon'ble Mr. A. Krishna Rao is indifferent, following, perhaps, the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao. Why should he not follow the lead of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapathi Raju and the Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao in Vizagapatam? Nobody need fear to found Home Rule Leagues, for the Madras High Court has, in the New India case, stated that the desire for swaraj is not an indication of disloyalty.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Sept. 30th, 1916.

Post-war settlement in India.

47. Referring to the memorandum on the post war settlement in India, submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy, by 19 members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 13th October, says:—The Pioneer is exerting its utmost to prove that the views of the Indian representatives are not those of the people at large. It says that only 19 of the elected members have signed the memorandum and not all. There are 27 elected members in the Council. Of them two are Europeans and they have not been consulted because they have nothing to do with the questions raised in the memorandum. It was not possible to obtain the signatures of three Indian members for they had been absent from Simla when the memorandum was got ready. The two Muhammadan representatives of Bengal approved of the memorial, but did not sign it because they wished to obtain some great privileges for the Muhammadans exclusively. Only one Indian refused to sign it without giving any reasons. The rest of the Indian members have been unanimous in the matter of the memorandum. It only betrays perverseness on the part of the Pioneer to have said that the memorandum represents the views of no more than 19 individuals, of whom vakils, who have not rendered any help in the war, form one-half.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

His Excellency the Viceroy's powers of nomination.

48. The Andhrapatrika, of the 13th October, says:—On the strength of the remark of His Excellency the Viceroy that the Viceroy's powers of nomination to the Legislative Council should be enlarged, the Burma branch of the Anglo-Indian Imperial Association has passed a resolution to the effect that the Secretary of State should at once enlarge such powers of the Viceroy, and that the latter should nominate an Anglo-Indian representative to his Legislative Council. In view of the fact that official nominations and separate representations admittedly run counter to the promotion of the representation of the people in general, the attitude of the Anglo-Indians in Burma justly deserves to be condemned. We hope that the authorities will not go against the times.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

Man power.

49. Referring to Sir Edward Carson's speech in which he asked Mr. Lloyd George whether he could give assurance that the English possessed sufficient man power, and requested him, if necessary, to take immediate steps to secure it in order to gain ultimate victory, the Andhrapatrika, of the 13th October, prays that Sir Edward Carson and others will not, when raising armies, forget India, which is enthusiastic, and is always ready to help in the defence of the empire.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

India's poverty.

50. The Desamata, of the 11th October, institutes a comparison between the economic conditions of India and England and says:—When compared with England, the poverty of India is very awful. Technical education, diffusion of scientific knowledge, free and compulsory elementary education are the only remedies to this poverty. The people should be enabled to demand that more money is spent for the Education Department than for any other. These things will not be possible until under the British Raj we are granted self-government.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Oct. 11th, 1916.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The Desamata, of the 11th October, says in its leader:—The three chief causes of India's poverty are the unbearable cost of Indian administration, the heavy taxation, and the decline of Indian industries. Of all administrations in the world, the cost of Indian administration is by far the greatest. Among other things, India bears the cost of the maintenance of western religious heads, and there seems to be no reason why that cost should be met from the Indian revenues. As for taxes, they are very heavy, and, unlike in the days of the Hindu and the Muhammadan kings, who were receiving a part of the produce of the lands, the British rulers have imposed assessment on lands, which is liable to fluctuation. The money that is annually remitted to England is always on the increase, and there are no industries in India to compensate this loss. These defects can never be set right until India gets swaraj under the British flag, and this is the only remedy for the poverty of India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

51. The Andhrapatrika, of the 14th October, represents the West Minister (sic) to have stated:—An Indian officer has told us that India wishes the victory of England in the war, but not so soon.

The victory of England.

ARYAVYSYA, Guntūr, Oct. 14th, 1916.

52. The Aryavysya, of the 14th October, is surprised to learn that the income of one Suggula Sundayya residing in Sangadigunta ward has not been assessed for income-tax purposes. He is worth Rs. 30,000 and is carrying on a trade. The paper is sure that if the Revenue authorities examine his accounts, they will find him liable to pay some income-tax to the Government.

Income tax, Guntūr.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

53. Referring to the announcement that Mr. Chamberlain has authorised the Indian Committee of the Imperial Institute to enquire into and report on the possibilities of extending the industrial and commercial utilisation of Indian raw materials in the United Kingdom and elsewhere in the empire, the Andhrapatrika, of the 16th October, remarks:—The Imperial Institute was founded so that the interests of all parts of the empire might be guarded eqally. It is the opinion of economic experts that it is best to turn raw materials into finished articles in the very places where they are produced. The reason why this idea has not struck the authorities of the Institute or the Secretary of State is that they are not our representatives.

The Imperial Institute.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

54. Referring to the announcement in the Gazette of India that three posts of Collectors and District Magistrates will hereafter be thrown open in the Madras Presidency to the Provincial Civil Service of that Presidency, the Andhraprakasika, of the 14th October, says:—If this should indicate the result of the enquiry of the Public Services Commission, it is an instance of the mountain being in labour and producing a mouse. While the Indians are eager to obtain high appointments, it is a surprise to learn that Diwan Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai will be posted to other duty and a European Civilian appointed in his place. The Government know that an Indian who is acquainted with the vernaculars and customs and manners of the country, is better fitted to be the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. It is difficult to understand under such circumstances the reason of the contemplated unsatisfactory arrangement.

Provincial Civil Service.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct 14th, 1916.

55. The Andhraprakasika, of the 14th October, refers to the discussion in the Joint Committee appointed to consider the Government of India Amendment Bill, and especially to the utterances of Lord Loreburn, Mr. Charles Roberts and Sir Herbert Roberts, and says:—It is gratifying to know that even the Secretary of State has not the power to accord sanction to such unjust laws as the Defence of India Act. We can appeal to the Privy Council against them. May those who have been punished thereunder do so and obtain relief! The decision of the committee marks the beginning of good days for India.

"The dawn."

56. Referring to the article in New India, complaining of the presence of a C.I.D. officer at the dinner given in honour of Mr. Wadia at Adyar, the Andhra-prakasika, of the 14th October, remarks:—If the attitude of suspicion or authority exceeds a certain limit, it produces unrest among the people. Nothing can be so helpful to administration as peaceful methods. It is not advisable to take steps that irritate and exasperate the people. Those that are suspected of encouraging disloyalty and making themselves ready for a rebellion, do not deserve any mercy. They should at once be arrested, their houses searched, and they themselves brought to book It is not right to follow people closely when they dine or do similar things and annoy them.

The acts of the C.I.D. officers.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

57. The Sasilekha, of the 13th October, learns with regret that the Government have directed that, in filling up vacancies in offices, non-Brahmans should be preferred to Brahmans. It remarks that it is not right on the part of the Government to view one class with favour and another with disfavour. Their attitude should be one of impartiality. It then says that racial antagonism among the Indians is growing stronger with spread of English education and despairs of the Indians ever becoming a nation. If they do not give up all racial and class hatred, says the paper, the grant to them of self-government will end in a catastrophe.

Racial and class hatred.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Oct. 13th, 1916.

58. In commenting on the Indian Industrial Commission, the Andhra-prakasika, of the 14th October, says:—The Government should introduce a system of protective tariff into India. They should guarantee profits to Indian merchants starting indigenous industries. They should first start some industries themselves and thus show the way. Unless they do so, there will be no use of the Industrial Commission The Commission should consult Indian experts and base its report on their opinion.

The Industrial Commission.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

59. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th October, quotes statistics to show that a considerable portion of the Indian population is engaged in minor factories and home industries. These people, it remarks, are now heavily involved in debt and if they are shown the means by which they can emancipate themselves, they will certainly help to develop the Indian industries equally with big factories. It opines that the Industrial Commission would have done better if they had taken up the question of village industries as a separate item and framed a separate set of questions thereabout. It hopes that the Commission will do so at least now, or remember the subject of village industries when dealing with the other questions.

Village industries.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 17th, 1916.

60. Referring to the system of indentured labour, the Andhrapatrika, of the 17th October, says:—Lord Hardinge has promised to abolish the system. But Lord Chelmsford has ignored the promise, and the rumour is gaining ground that arrangements are being made to facilitate voluntary emigration. An English paper has put the question whether Lord Chelmsford has the authority to cancel the decision of his predecessor. This adverse opinion about Lord Chelmsford is due to a misconception, and the people may find a satisfactory indication of this in the decision of the Government to depute a non-official along with an official to conduct the enquiry into the present system of emigration to Ceylon.

Indentured labour.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 17th, 1916.

61. The Andhrapatrika, of the 18th October, says:—It has been the practice to appoint non-officials as Indian Members in the Executive Councils ever since the Minto-Morley reforms were introduced. It is not possible to believe that the authorities would have followed that practice if that were not the intention of the reformers. Papers like the Madras Mail say that it is undesirable to make a distinction between officials and non-officials in this respect and that it is of far greater benefit to appoint an official as the Indian member. But Executive members appointed from officials will always be inclined to the official side and will not place the non-official view before the Government. It is therefore essential that a non-official who is well-acquainted with the views of the people is appointed to the seat of the Indian member. A perfect course will be to enable the non-official members to elect one among themselves to fill up that seat. But this is not now possible. It will be some improvement on the present system if the rulers nominate one of the non-official members of the Legislative Council to the seat. If even this is not practicable, Lord Pentland will do well to follow the present practice of appointing a non-official belonging to the Madras Presidency and not an official to the seat of the Indian member.

The Indian Executive Member.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

Emigration.

62. The Andhraprakasika, of the 14th October, says:—The reason why the Indian coolie is looked down upon by the Colonists is that he is a man of frugal habits and can live on low wages while a European coolie cannot. The Colonists fear that, if a large number of Indian coolies emigrate to their country, they may deprive the western coolie of his bread. The westerners wish that the Indians should remain illiterate and serve the Europeans like slaves. We pray that the Government will abolish all emigration to the Colonies.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The next Congress.

63. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 11th October, rejoices at the election of the Hon'ble Mr. Muzumdar as the President of the ensuing Congress, and congratulates the "All-India Congress Committee" on the happy selection they have made.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The Arms Act in Malabar.

64. In reviewing the report on the working of the Arms Act in the Presidency, the Yogakshemam, of the 13th October, observes that it is a pity that the Arms Act should be so rigorously enforced in a district like Malabar, where there are extensive forests infested with wild beasts.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 17th, 1916.

The Tiyyas and Muhammadans of Kuttipuram.

65. A correspondent in the Manorama, of the 17th October, draws attention to the strained relations between the Tiyyas and Muhammadans of Kuttipuram consequent upon the conversion of a Tiyya woman and a Cherumi into Muhammadanism by the latter, and hopes that the authorities concerned will take necessary precautions so that no breach of the peace may occur as a result of this feud.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 17th, 1916.

The recent Malabar tour of His Excellency Lord Pentland.

66. Referring to the recent tour, in Malabar, of His Excellency Lord Pentland, the Manorama, of the 17th October, points out that the object of these tours is to gain first-hand information about the real condition of the people in the various parts of the Presidency, which, it is glad, Lord Pentland always bears in mind, and that His Excellency's visit to the Soap Factory at Tanur, and his acceptance of the address of the fishermen of the place, testify, respectively, to His Excellency's keen interest in our industries and to his sympathy with the poor, and observes that the grievances referred to in the address of the fishermen deserve His Excellency's early attention.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 17th, 1916.

Memorandum of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council.

67. Referring to the recent memorandum submitted to the Viceroy by a majority of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Keralodayam, of the 17th October, points out that, though it was prepared without the knowledge of the people in general, the reforms outlined therein are such as have been demanded by the leaders of the people for a long time past, and hopes that the memorandum will receive due attention at the hands of the Government.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 18th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 18th October, approves of the step taken by the non-official members and observes that most of the demands are the same as those of the Congress.

68. Referring to the decision of the Supreme Government to abolish the duty imposed by them on the tea exported from Travancore, the Malayali, of the 14th October, says:—This decision of the Supreme Government, which, no doubt, entails some loss to them, is highly commendable. In fact we were quite confident that the Government would do nothing in this matter, which would be prejudicial to the interests of the Travancore Darbar.

Duty on tea exported by Travancore.

MALAYALI, Quilon, Oct. 14th, 1916.

The Malayala Manorama, of the 18th October, rejoices at the abolition of the duty imposed by Supreme Government on the tea exported from Travancore, which it treats as a victory for Travancore, and congratulates the British Government on their sense of justice and the Diwan on the success with which his efforts have been crowned.

Abolition of the duty on tea exported from Travancore.

MALAYALA MANORAMA Kottayam, Oct. 18th, 1916.

69. In reviewing the report on the working of the Arms Act in the Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 18th October, points out that the policy of the Madras Government seems to be to reduce, as much as possible, the number of licenses for the possession of arms for ceremonial purpose, and rejoices that they have not grudged the granting of such licenses when the arms are intended to serve as protection against wild beasts.

The working of the Arms Act in the Presidency.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 18th, 1916.

70. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 14th October, writes:—As the time for the meetings of the two great assemblies of Hindus and Muhammadans is approaching, we should like to acquaint our Muhammadan brethren and leaders with our views and sentiments so that unmoved by selfishness they may act with foresight and spare no effort in endeavouring to do their duty to the King, Government and the community.

The Congress and the League.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

It must be thoroughly understood that the aims and objects of the Congress in obtaining self-government will not in the least benefit us. Hence the Muslim League should not follow in the footsteps of the Congress in this regard. For Muhammadans self-government is a deadly poison. Muhammadans whose number is very small and who are far behind their Hindu brethren materially and educationally are bound to be the losers by self-government. They should also bear in mind that the Congress meetings cannot produce any beneficial results for Muhammadans.

Further, it is unwise to rely on any such imaginary hopes of success, and to invite the attention of the Government to the matter when it is facing a formidable foe.

We ask whether the British Government who rule over different parts and countries of the globe, are well experienced in and acquainted with political matters or a few Hindu leaders who have gained the little knowledge they possess through the generosity of our liberal Government? In any case no one can assert that we are more experienced in political matters than the Government and when the Government who are well aware of the expediency of the time for some reason or other abstain from granting self-government to such a vast country like India and they know too well that that form of Government will not prove beneficial to them.

It is incumbent on our Muhammadan brethren and national leaders that they should avoid at this juncture such a discussion but direct the attention of the nation towards showing loyalty to the Government by helping it with life and property. Our duty is to refrain from moving any resolution in the meeting of the Muslim League inviting the attention of Government towards any complicated matters at a time when it is engaged in a mortal combat with our mortal foe who is endeavouring to wipe out civilization from the face of the earth and suggesting such things as may facilitate the Government's task in subduing their enemy. It is hoped that our national leaders will take this suggestion into consideration and act on it.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

71. The Qaumi Report, of the 16th October, referring to the petition submitted to the Viceroy by nineteen elected Members of the Imperial Legislative Council making the following suggestions—(1) that Executive Councils of Governments should consist of elected members, (2) that the number of elected members in Legislative Councils should be increased, (3) that the budget estimate of each department should be submitted separately and, etc., and also referring to the Pioneer's criticism of the members' signing such a petition without consulting either their electorate of their national leaders, says: "We do not consider either the petition or the suggestions made therein to be important enough to call for criticism. At the present time the most important question and the essence of several hundreds of other questions, is what will be the condition of India after the war. We know that voices have been raised in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, etc., and Great Britain has replied that their conditions will surely change and they will not be subservient to another power, but will be regarded as equals. In the map of those countries our country also finds a place. All of them including ourselves are subject to the British Crown, and we are neither ashamed nor do we object to continue to remain so. But our present education and civilization do not permit us to allow the old order to continue after the war.

"After the war".

If those countries are under the British, so are we. If they are loyal allies of Britain, so are we. If they have fought shoulder to shoulder with the British forces, so have we. If they have suffered losses on account of the war, so have we. Should the Government be inclined to grant them a larger measure of freedom, independence and rights, we may ask that we may also be favoured with like consideration. If India is not to be made equal to the Canada of to-day, it may be made equal to the Canada of yesterday.

It is advisable for us to consider this question and if consideration and consultation allow, we should demand it in a reasonable manner, and if we are found to be still unqualified and unfit for independence, we should endeavour to fit ourselves for it. For when the clouds of progres are spreading over the neighbouring countries we should not be content with our miserable hut.

III.—Legislation.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

72. The Andhrapatrika, of the 12th October, thanks the Hon'ble Sir Harold Stuart for preparing a Bill to regulate the rate of interest and the transfer of land in the Ganjām and Vizagapatam Agency tracts and says:—It is provided in the Bill that when any officer other than the Agent sets aside a transfer of land, an appeal shall lie to the Agent, whose decision shall be final. But the powers already vested in the Agent are too great and this new power only makes matters worse. It will, therefore, be well if the appeal is made to lie to an officer of the Judicial Department. This Bill ameliorates the economic condition of the people in the Agency tracts. But a law requires to be enacted applicable to the whole country, to discourage the usurious rate of interest charged by the money-lending classes.

The Agency Tracts Interest and Land Transfer Bill.

Andhraprakasika, Madras, Oct. 14th, 1916.

73. Referring to the fact that the young men of Walajanagar are patrolling the town with a view to guard it from thieves and dacoits who have been of late doing some havoc in it, the Andhraprakasika, of the 14th October, says:—These young men are armed with lathis. It is the misfortune of the country that although the people thus help in the administration, they are not allowed to bear arms in order to carry on their compaign against robberies and dacoities more efficiently. . . . . Had the boys in India been given military training in the way in which it is given to the boy scouts in England, the Government would have been enabled to send a large army of Indians to the war front. We pray that our rulers will ponder over this matter and, relaxing the provisions of the Arms Act, train an army of boy scouts in India.

The Arms Act.

74. The Andhrapatrika, of the 17th October, says:—In convicting offenders under the Defence of India Act, there is no proper enquiry; nor is there a right of appeal granted to the accused. It is not strange under such circumstances that the majority of those punished under the Act are deemed innocent by the people. The discussion that took place in the Joint Committee appointed to consider the Government of India Amendment Bill has confirmed the opinion that the Defence of India Act is a piece of illegal legislation. The Supreme Legislative Council and the Provincial Legislative Councils have, out of ignorance or for some other reason, enacted laws which deprive the people of their right to sue the Secretary of State. The Joint Committee has opined that the Defence of India Act is the foremost of them. The English Parliament has not authorised the Government of India to disallow the right of appeal against the decision of the tribunal constituted under the Defence of India Act. The Act is therefore illegal and the whole country now waits to see that this view is established in the law courts.

The Defence of India Act.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 17th, 1916.

75. Referring to the India Bill, the Lokaprakasam, of the 16th October, has the following in English:—"No information, whatever, of the Amendment Bill, was given to the Indians before its presentation to the Parliament, and since the news reached our country it was discovered that several clauses contained therein affected the liberty and privileges of our countrymen, in a manner detrimental to their interests. As a consequence a hue and cry was raised, both in the Press and on the platform by responsible Indians, which was soon followed by a publication here of the Bill with its objects and reasons. That the presentation of such a Bill in Parliament, without feeling the pulse of public opinion in this country, was a rank blunder of grave magnitude, was more than clearly shown, and it was rightly endorsed by the Chairman and certain members of the Committee. The practice obtaining here of publishing a Bill with its objects and reasons, preparatory to presenting it before the Provincial or Imperial Legislative Council and inviting public criticism thereon, is a matter of common knowledge. And it is but proper that much more care and caution should be taken before presenting a Bill concerning Indian administration in the houses of Parliament, though Mr. Charles Roberts was of opinion that it was not the practice. Lord Sydenham, a former Governor of Bombay, it is interesting to see, stoutly opposed the views held by Mr. Roberts.

The India Bill.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Oct. 16th, 1916.

"One of the principal clauses in the Bill was in the matter of taking away the privilege of suing the Secretary of State for India, which has been enjoyed by the people of this country from times of yore. There was a very lively discussion on the point, and even the Chairman and some of the Committee-members were against the amendment. The question was fully considered again in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, and thinking it inadvisable to handle any controversial measure at this time of world-shaking war, that particular portion of the clause was deleted. Several other portions of the Bill of a similar nature have also undergone the desirable changes. These and other similar events lead us to believe that any measure adversely affecting India, contemplated perhaps through a sheer short-sighted policy, if brought to the notice of the powers that be in time, is sure to receive at the hands of the Government that full amount of consideration which is rightly its due."

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

76. Referring to the 33rd Session of the Mysore Representative Assembly, the Swadesamitran, of the 10th October, says:—The fact that this assembly has been successfully carrying on the administration of the Mysore State is sufficient evidence of the capacity of our people to govern themselves. Coming to the speech of Sir M. Visveswarayya, the Diwan, at the opening of this session, it no doubt shows how much the State has progressed during his regime. But it is regrettable that, while trying to secure the welfare of the State and to obtain Administration in Mysore.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 10th, 1916.

the good-will of the people, his conclusions have been very narrow in one or two matters. Firstly, our readers are aware that the Press law is more stringent in Mysore than it is in British Dominions and that, on account of this, there are only one or two well-conducted newspapers in the State. The present Diwan, in spite of his liberal policy in other matters, has not been pleased to relax the restrictions on the press and his statement in reply to a question on this subject, that nothing could be done in the matter until the war came to an end is both curious and disappointing. That portion of the speech of the Diwan which refers to the Kannambady Project will also be received with regret by the Mirasidars of Tanjore and Trichinopoly. He said that those who objected to the storage of the waters of the Cauvery by the Mysore Government were labouring under a misconception. We do not understand this statement. When mountains and tanks, hills and valleys exist in a tract belonging to more than one party, both according to the law of nature and the regulations of States, each party has got the right of using the rivers, forests, etc., in such territory, without injuring the interests of others. The Government of Madras lost such a natural right over the waters of the Cauvery by the terms of its agreement with the Mysore State in 1891. The award of the arbitrators about the Kannambady Project was based only on this technical point. The arbitrators never went into the question of the relative rights of higher and lower riparian owners over the waters of the Cauvery. They have stated clearly that but for this agreement, the people of this Presidency could successfully prevent the Mysore Government from putting up a dam at Kannambady. So the people of the Tanjore and Trichinopoly districts should try hereafter at least to get rid of this agreement to which they were no parties. Moreover the Diwan says that it is possible to erect dams both in Mysore and in this Presidency and to improve irrigation. It is the duty of the Government of India and the Secretary of State to inquire into the feasibility of this suggestion, and, if it is found practicable, to take steps to erect a dam over the Cauvery within British Dominions for storing sufficient water for purposes of irrigation here, before allowing the Mysore Government to complete its project. It is not only the time of floods in the river that should be taken into consideration in calculating the volume of water available for irrigation. It has also to be considered whether the volume of water in the river in the dry season will be sufficient for irrigating the existing lands and those which may be brought under cultivation in the future.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 12th, 1916.

The Hindu Nesan, of the 12th October, also takes exception to the views expressed by Sir M. Visveswarayya regarding the relative rights of the people of Mysore and the Mirasdars of the Tanjore and Trichinopoly districts over the waters of the Cauvery.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 11th, 1916.

The administration of Mysore.

In reviewing the recent speech of the Diwan of Mysore, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 11th October, draws attention to the sound condition of the finances of the State, and to the progress made by it in all directions, especially in education, and observes that the efficient manner in which the administration is carried on in Mysore, Baroda and Travancore, amply testifies to the possession, by the Indians, of the necessary qualifications for self-government.

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Oct. 11th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Malayala Manorama, of the 11th October, also refers to the wonderful progress made in all directions by Mysore, which some years ago was far behind Travancore, but which now is far ahead of the latter, and remarks that, if Travancore continues to be indifferent, as she now seems to be, not only will she be pushed back considerably, but all her wealth also will be snatched away from her by foreigners.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 13th, 1916.

Mysore administration.

The Manorama, of the 13th October, speaks in appreciative terms of the message of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore to the Representative Assembly, and of the introductory speech of the Diwan, when it assembled, and observes that the Travancore Darbar will do well to arrange likewise for the holding of the Popular Assembly twice a year.

The Yogaksemam, of the 13th October, also speaks in appreciative terms of the message of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore and of the Diwan's address, refers to the great progress which the State has made during the regimè of Sir Visweswarayya, and observes that the administration of Mysore testifies to the advantage of having really patriotic men to govern a country.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Oct. 13th, 1916.

The Bharata Kesari, of the 11th October, makes a detailed reference to the address of the Diwan of Mysore, and congratulates him on his strenuous efforts to accelerate the progress of the State in every direction.

BHARATA KESARI, Trivandrum, Oct. 11th, 1916.

Mysore administration.

In reviewing the Mysore administration, the Keralodayam, of the 17th October, refers to the progress made by the State in every direction, especially in education and industrial affairs, during the regimè of Sir Visweswarayya, points out that His Highness the Maharaja's decision to hold the representative assembly twice a year, and to allow the people to discuss the budget, testify equally to His Highness's solicitude for the welfare of the people, and to the capacity of the people for self-government, and observes that, as a result of the recent awakening in Mysore, this State will, ere long, compare favourably with any of the modern enlightened countries.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 17th, 1916.

The Nazrani Deepika, of the 17th October, makes remarks about the administration of Mysore more or less similar to those already reported.

NASRANI DEEPIKA, Mannanam, Oct. 17th, 1916.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

77. In an article, in English, reviewing the Diwan's address to the Mysore Representative Assembly, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 20th October, observes:—"It stated the circumstances that convinced His Highness the Maharaja that the Assembly had more than fulfilled the expectations which were formed at the time of its establishment. The Diwan said that His Highness observed with gratification the intelligence and moderation which marked the deliberations of the Assembly and the increasing interest which its members showed in all questions of public importance connected with the administration of the State. He added that it was His Highness' earnest desire to increase still further the mutual confidence between the officers of the State and the representatives of the people, and to enable the latter to understand and identify themselves still more closely with the policy of the Government. His ideas were excellent. His heart was good. His patriotism is undoubted and there was no one that did not believe that he was the worthiest of ministers that Mysore ever had. . . . . God bless His Highness the Maharaja, and may Sir M. Visveswaraya be spared long to show to the world that his economic activities, so little understood by superficial observers would, in the fullness of time, bear their legitimate fruit and prove the material and more salvation of the country."

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

Referring to the decision of the Government of Mysore to hold two sessions of the Representative Assembly every year, the Mysore Star, of the 15th October, remarks that although some of the members of this Assembly have been urging the grant of this privilege for some time past, we do not share the view that it was a very necessary privilege.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Oct. 15th, 1916.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

Referring to His Highness the Maharaja's recent message to the Mysore Representative Assembly, the Bharata Kesari, of the 14th October, congratulates the Darbar and the people on the privileges granted to the latter, and observes that the other Native States will do well to bear in mind that Mysore owes her progress to her institutions, like the Representative Assembly and the Legislative Council.

BHARATA KESARI, Trivandrum, Oct. 14th, 1916.

Recruiting scandals in Travancore.

78. In a long leader under the heading "recruiting scandals in Travancore", the Malayali, of the 11th October, draws attention to the alarm caused amongst the poor innocent people of Kottarakkarai in Travancore by the Parvathikkarans (village officers) and other petty officers of the State who with a view to obtaining money threaten them with forcible recruitment into the army, and hopes that the Travancore Darbar will, at an early date, appoint a committee consisting of honest officials and non-officials to enquire into the matter and thus allay the alarm of the people, who are fleeing from the country and taking refuge on the hills.

MALAYALI, Quilon, Oct. 11th, 1916.

DHARMAPOSHINI, Quilon, Oct. 17th, 1916.

Recruiting scandals in Travancore.

The Dharmaposhini, of the 17th October, also refers to the recruiting scandals in Travancore, and observes that the offending village officials should not be let off with a mere warning, but that they should be severely dealt with, so that it may serve as a lesson to other officials.

II.—Home Administration.

(b) Courts.

New India security case.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 19th October, remarks:—"The Special Bench of the High Court has delivered judgment dismissing Mrs. Besant's appeal under the Press Act, probably agreeing with the observations of the Calcutta Court in the Comrade case. . . . . Six of the ablest Judges of India having expressed themselves in unequivocable terms on the scope of the Act, the executive are now fortified and can put the Act into operation with perfect impunity. The danger before the Indian press has now become graver, and it behoves every patriotic son of India to utilise every constitutional method to get removed from the statute book a measure which is out of place in this twentieth century. The Act was conceived in panic, circumstances might have justified its inception in the dark days of the unrest, but it is no longer politic to give it 'house room'. . . . The executive has ample power to put down incitements to murder and sedition, why then go to an Act which is directly opposed to the best traditions and instincts of the great English race? We appeal to the Government in all humility to save us from an incubus that is sitting heavily on the bosom of the press. We earnestly hope that Lord Chelmsford will give us the relief and thus entitle himself to be regarded as one of the greatest of the benefactors of India."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 19th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Reformer, of the 20th October, says:—"The dismissal of Mrs. Besant's appeal under the Press Act by the Madras High Court cannot cause much surprise among those who are aware of the provisions of the Press Act and the judgment in the Comrade case and also the nature of the articles in New India mentioned in the order of forfeiture. All that could be expected was a judicial pronouncement which might strengthen the hands of those who are protesting against the continuance of the Act and appealing to the highest Governmental authorities for the total repeal or substantial modification of the unpopular and repressive legislation. The Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins of the Calcutta High Court had already exposed mercilessly the unhappy features of the Act, and now the Officiating Chief Justice Mr. Abdur Rahim of the Madras High Court has added to the exposure of the drastic provisions of the Act. . . . . This is a strong condemnation of the Act, and it is a pity that the Court did not find its way to declare any part of the Act ultra vires for the general or special reasons urged by Mrs. Besant. It becomes now certain that the Government of India alone have the power to modify their precious press law and that the High Court cannot render any assistance in the matter."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 21st October, writes:—"The hostility of Anglo-Indian journals towards Indians and their interests in this country has been growing in virulence for some time past, and it has made itself manifest in a pronounced form in their strictures upon the memorandum for political reforms submitted by the elected representatives of the Imperial Legislative Council as well as upon the opinions of the Indian Judges who have sat in judgment in New India security case. . . . . The leading local Anglo-Indian paper (the Madras Mail) makes in last night's issue a most dastardly attack on the judgment of the Acting Chief Justice stigmatising it as one which it has perused 'with surprise culminating in stupefaction,' and holding it up to ridicule by mischievous comments, because the learned Judge has observed that with the Press Act, 'the keeping of printing presses and the publication of newspapers becomes an extremely hazardous undertaking.' The attack is particularly objectionable since under the circumstances no reply is possible to the comments of the journal in question. . . . . Anglo-Indian papers in the country are, as was suggested in the Hon'ble Mr. Paranjape's interpellation in the Bombay Legislative Council, enjoying a practical immunity from the rigorous provisions of the Press Act, and the unbridled license with which they can afford to criticise everything Indian, is frequently in evidence before the public."

Hindu, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

MALABAR HERALD, Cochin, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The Malabar Herald, of the 21st October, observes:—"Those who are well acquainted with the virulent character of Mrs. Besant's campaign, both in the press and on the platform for Home Rule, will not, we think, be taken aback by the decision of the High Court of Madras who have dismissed her petition and the criminal case."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

In concluding a leader under the heading "Searchings of Heart," criticising the remarks of the Madras Mail, on this case, New India, of the 23rd October, states:—We feel specially grateful to the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Ayling. He was most patient, most courteous through the hearing; there was absolutely nothing to complain of throughout, and his judgment is invaluable, as throwing light on the way in which an honest and painstaking Indian Civil Service Judge views criticisms of the bureaucracy and the Anglo-Indian. He read between the lines thoughts that were not there, and found motives which had no existence. But this was manifestly done with entire honesty of purpose, and we think that he believed that Bepin Chandra Pal said assassins should not be punished, although he said they ought to be punished. A Civilian cannot but see through Civilian glasses, and if the glasses are red and he looks at green, he necessarily sees black. That Mr. Justice Ayling thinks Mrs. Besant disloyal and seditious was obvious throughout his judgment. The Acting Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Ayyar see her as loyal and law-abiding. How can such different views come from the judicial bench? The answer is obvious, that the angle of vision determines the view. The Civilian, believing in bureaucracy and repression, sees all resistance to tyranny as sedition; the Indian longing for his country's freedom, sees that same resistance as patriotic and as serving India's good. The moral is that political discussion should be free, where it does not advocate rebellion and violence. And to that conclusion local Governments must come, if they do not wish to be entangled in endless law-suits and an ever-growing popular indignation."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 24th, 1916.

2. New India, of the 24th October, observes:—"We await with interest the submission of the Local Government to the law. We cannot believe that the Governor in Council will resist the decision of the High Court that the order of the Magistrate, acting, be it remembered, under his direct instructions, is illegal. To hold money illegally obtained would be worse than to seize it under cover of a bad law. We cannot believe that Lord Pentland is prepared to face English public opinion with the defiance of the High Court round his neck. We, therefore, await with confidence the return of our Rs. 12,000 with the interest due thereon."

The High Court and Government.

(d) Education.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

3. The Indian Patriot, of the 23rd October, writes:—"One reads the Government of India letter on the Decentralisation Commission's Report on the State educational policy with keen disappointment and bitter regret.

The Decentralisation Commission and education.

"The letter of the Government of India will not affect the even tenor of our educational rulers, and men may now blissfully forget the existence of any educational concerns for the State. Read the letter of the Government of India a dozen times, if you can find the time, and rest assured that you will not be bothered with any controversial worries for years to come. . . . . Decades run, new measures and new men continually attract and distract our minds, lakhs of rupees are thrown away on costly organisations and dramatic shows of Commission inquiries and conferences and reports, hopes are raised and disappointed, and after all, the final command of the arbiter of our destinies is: As we were, we have been, and shall ever be. May it never be otherwise?

"There is no question of decentralisation of real and efficient administrative powers. The whole thing flavours of ugly political suspicion. If political considerations require it, there should be absolutely no difficulty whatever in State officers getting the fullest information on every conceivable topic of schoolwork in the country. The schoolmaster may be called upon to place himself under perpetual observation, and Revenue officers and a central Government need not interfere with the educational work of the country. Provision being made for political observation, why should not local bodies be left free to do their educational work according to their own sentiments and requirements? . . . . If local bodies be empowered to raise funds and to meet all kinds of local educational requirements, each locality shall work out its future according to its power, and the Government may be usefully employed in helping the backward. As it is, the Central Government is neither capable of doing the entire work owing to its impossible vastness and quite bewildering complexity, nor will it divest itself of its crushing burden by trusting the local self-government bodies! This is what the man in the street will bluntly call a dog-in-the-manger policy.

"When free and compulsory secondary education is advocated in the United States, when free secondary education is advocated even in England, it is lamentable audacity to repeat old-world formulas leading to stagnation and despair. We are sick of this sort of thing. Enough of this dallying and let there be energetic work. Let the educational work of the State be dissociated from the blighting thraldom of politics. . . . . The Reports and Conferences of local Governments and roving Commissions can never better the situation. We want a statesman of the first order to effect a thorough revolution in our educational organisation and methods. We want a statesman who can secure the educational advancement of this country on the secure basis of Legislative safeguards. In every modern State, educational organisation is left to the direct direction of those whom it concerns; that it cannot be otherwise has been times without number demonstrated by the illusory shows of bureaucratic reports and pretensions, and the latest report under reference is a typical exhibit."

The Rev. J. H. Moulton and the Madras University.

4. The following appears in the Hindu of the 24th October:—"One of the propositions to be moved at the next meeting of the Senate of the Madras University on Friday is a motion by the Hon'ble Mr. Stone, Director of Public Instruction, requesting the sanction of the Senate, with the approval of the Government, for a special course of lectures on 'Aryan Antiquities,' to be delivered by the Rev. J. H. Moulton, who is said to be Professor of Philology in the University of Manchester, the cost of the lectures being defrayed from the annual recurring grant of Rs. 65,000 by the Government of India. The Madras University has had, as the public is aware, considerable difficulty in finding suitable ways for spending the amounts, recurring and non-recurring, placed at its disposal by the Government of India, and the present proposal seems to be one intended to ease the University of some of its superfluous cash. The reverend gentleman who is to be proposed as a lecturer on Indian Antiquities is evidently something of a globe-trotter, and in the course of his meanderings, he seems to have 'done' India and picked up the wherewithal which probably forms his equipment of knowledge for his lectures. According to his own account there is nothing for him to do in England at present and he is without profitable employment. He was lately touring through Mysore, and has also had the honour of being invited to a Government House party in Ootacamund. . . . . Is the Madras University, in addition to its other good objects, going to become a proselytising institution in favour of Christianity that it is proposed to invite this evangelising lecturer to instruct University pupils? The Rev. Mr. Moulton's anti-Hindu and anti-Indian sentiments are further made clear in the extracts which we give below from his article in the Methodist Recorder, which teems with sneering and contemptuous remarks regarding the people of the country, their religion, their institutions and their national ideals. . . . . Our European friends seem generally more anxious to make our young men look backwards than to go forward in the march of civilization. If Indian antiquities have to be dealt with at all, it must be by a professor of very different mould from that of the Rev. Mr. Moulton, and by an Indian in sympathies, if not also by birth. We hope the Hon'ble Mr. Stone will not press his proposition on the Senate in the light of these considerations. If the proposition is moved, we are sure from what we know of the views of several of them, that the Indian Fellows will consider it inconsistent with their sense of national self-respect to vote in favour of it."

Hindu, Madras, Oct. 24th, 1916.

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, Oct. 25th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Karnataka, of the 25th October, says:—"At the meeting of the Madras University Senate to be held on the 27th instant, the Hon'ble Mr. Stone, Director of Public Instruction, is to move the following resolution:—

"The Syndicate requests the sanction of the Senate to make arrangements, with the approval of Government, for a course of Special University lectures on "Aryan Antiquities" to be delivered in Madras by the Rev. J. H. Moulton, D. LITT., Professor of Comparative Philology in the University of Manchester, the cost of the lectures being defrayed from the annual recurring grant of Rs. 65,000 by the Government of India."

"We sincerely wish the learned professor named above were not the same as that mischievous-minded Missionary who recently blackened the Methodist Recorder with columns of puerile rubbish concerning the religion and the University of Mysore. And yet, considering the perversity with which the fates have been dealing with the destinies of the Madras University within recent years, we need feel no surprise at all if its forthcoming exponent of Aryan antiquities should be no one else than the author. . . . . No self-respecting Indian could help cherishing the heartiest contempt for the writer of such a vulgar-spirited caricature of his ancient and dearly-cherished institutions. If the above were a serious and scholarly criticism of Hinduism, we could understand it, and appreciate the earnestness of the writer as a seeker after truth. But obviously, there is neither profundity of wisdom nor even common fairness in the envenomed outpouring of Dr. Moulton. At best, it is a piece of self-revelation of which every Indian would do well to take note in view of the honour which the Madras University proposes to confer on that Christian celebrity. For the discovery of this rare species of scholarship in Aryan lore, we suppose we have to thank the Young Men's Christian Association, which has been the recipient of nothing but uniform kindness and munificent assistance at the hands of that very gracious Maharaja and his liberal-minded people upon whose household deity Dr. Moulton has copiously showered his choicest epithets of cheap ridicule."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 26th, 1916.

New India, of the 26th October, writes:—"When we reprinted from the Methodist Recorder, which reached us in our weekly budget of newspaper-cuttings from England, some paragraphs in which Dr. Moulton sneered at Hindu beliefs and at the Mysore University, our object was merely to warn Hindus against Missionaries, who smile on them to their faces and abuse them behind their backs. We have seen so much of the mischief done to India by these gentry among their own countrymen, that we always grieve when we see honest Indians deceived by their smooth talk in India. We did not know that we were throwing a bomb into the sacred precincts of the University (please, Mr. Public Prosecutor, this is figurative), and blowing up the plan to induct Dr. Moulton into a lectureship on Aryan antiquities. How he would deal with them, we can see from his 'she-devil'. It seems, however, that our exposure came in the very nick of time, and the whole article has been reprinted and circulated among the Indian Fellows."

5. The Hindu, of the 27th October, has the following :—"We publish elsewhere the resolutions passed at a public meeting at Salem relating to the attitude of the Government of Madras in regard to the appointment of a Principal to the Municipal College. . . . . This curious order of the Government is naturally exercising the minds of the citizens of Salem who very properly apprehend that such a direction amounts to undue interference with the discharge of his duties by the Chairman who has, according to the rules, to make the nomination. The Government, we may note, were within their rights in rejecting the nomination of the Chairman, though we think they ought not to have done so. It is not prudent on the part of Government to take away the responsibility which ought to belong to the Chairman and his Council in the selection of a Principal. Let that, however, pass. After rejecting the first nomination the Government had a right to ask for a second nomination which they have done. But they have done more—they have sought to fetter the discretion of the Chairman by foisting on him a committee which he may not want. The Chairman may or may not have a committee of his own choice to assist him in the selection of a suitable person to the responsible post of Principal. But the Government cannot obviously direct him to consult a committee of which the Circle Inspector of Schools, who is a Government servant, should be one. We wonder what made the Government take this unusual and objectionable step which has aroused so much feeling. It is not too late yet—the Government have, to be consistent with the rules they have made on the matter, only to retrace a little in order to remove the just cause of resentment."

6. In an article headed "Official Incapacity," the Indian Patriot, of the 27th October, says :—"The report of Mr. Davis, the Special officer appointed by the Government of Madras to work up the forest panchayats, is at once a serious criticism of the district administration and the incapacity of the average Collector to rise above the common rut of his official duties. We all know, sometimes to our cost, that the Indian Civil Service can do everything. The word 'Impossible' has been erased from their dictionary as from the dictionary of the great Bonaparte. . . . . The District officer to-day has absolutely no time to do anything that requires free movement among the people. Of course, we are told that he knows more about the masses than the Indian politician who claims to speak on his behalf! We know, however, that the official has no time, and if anything useful but a little out of the way of the daily routine has to be done, a special officer has to be employed. This is yet another argument, if indeed it was needed, for the development of the district boards into more real parts of administration. A non-official could have done even more than Mr. Davis, if he had the necessary authority, and every district board could surely give one or two enthusiastic members to do honorary work. It is acknowledged that the District official has no time; why should not a member of the district board be more responsibly connected with the district administration?"

7. The Hindu, of the 21st October, observes :—"We publish elsewhere the fifth and last of the series of letters by Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya on the working of the Bank of Madras from the point of view of Indian agriculture, trade and industries. These letters, as is well known, have been written by way of reply to the observations made by the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Bank challenging certain statements of Mr. Pandya in the course of his evidence before the last Royal Commission on Indian Finance. In these Mr. Pandya ably contends by reference to facts and figures that the policy of the Bank, in the matter of opening branches as well as in that of making advances, has been calculated far more to foster foreign trade than to develop internal credit or trade, more to stimulate the raising of crops and grains which Europe requires than to aid the growth of indigenous industries or the production of materials required for such growth. . . . . As we have observed before more than once, there is one remedy which, however partial and inadequate it might be deemed to be, would, if adopted, go a great way in solving this complicated but nevertheless important problem. That is to give Indians a co-decisive voice in the affairs transacted by the bank."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 21st October, says:—"We publish to-day the last of the series of letters written by Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya of the Indian Bank in reply to the challenge of the President of the Bank of Madras. Mr. Pandya has framed his reply with a view to make it intelligible to even that section of the public which is not generally interested in the financial or business affairs of this Presidency, and we have no doubt, his reply would have been more crushing if the Bank of Madras, after challenging Mr. Pandya, had not refused unfairly, in our opinion, to give him access to the information on which the President based his criticisms. . . . . Our readers will no doubt agree with us that in spite of the refusal of the bank to supply him the latest information, Mr. Pandya has effectively answered the criticisms of the President of the Bank. . . . . The policy of the Bank of Madras is certainly not what one expects from an institution so dependent on State assistance, i.e., the funds of the taxpayer, and instead of trying to whitewash it, the authorities of the bank will do well to see whether the time has not come for them to pay due attention to the needs of India. If they have the foresight, they must see around them signs which make it increasingly difficult to continue in any sphere a policy which is not in the interests of the people; and statesmanship lies in recognising and welcoming the inevitable, rather than in putting up a blind wall of opposition which cannot be in the interests of the institution with whose destinies they are temporararily entrusted."

The message, among other things, says that 'Jamadar Wazir Khan, on whom the command of the party (i.e., main body) devolved owing to the British officers' casualties, displayed great courage and ability.' Under the circumstances Indians might well ask if a better form of appreciation would not be raising him to the commissioned rank."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The ruling caste.

9. In an article headed "Isolation or Sacrifice," New India, of the 21st October, remarks:—"'The history of civilization,' says Lord Morley, 'is the history of the displacement of old conceptions by new ones more conformable to the facts,' and the fault of the present system of Government in India is that instead of concentrating attention on changing conditions, our rulers start with what they regard as root-principles of Government and then expect the facts to accommodate themselves to the requirements of the principles. . . . . The bureaucratic caste in India, like its fellow-castes among Mussalmans and Hindus, has no theoretical objection to change. Upon change, indeed, the world subsists. But the ultimate end of the change must be clearly perceived in the case of bodies of people forming an exclusive caste, and the result is that there arises a very emphatic practical objection to change in any shape. . . . . Every member of the caste is certain in his heart that solicitude is his only consideration. But there are two facts to shatter an illusion which is quite natural, seeing that we all look upon our motives as in the highest degree self-sacrificing and disinterested. The first fact is the ever-increasing estrangement between the ruling caste and the other castes comprising the people as a whole. The second fact is psychological, for it is an admitted truth that bodies corporate tend to spend less and less time on their duties and more and more time on the retention of those prejudices which preserve the form to the dwarfing of the soul. . . . . The ruling caste in India still lives on the consecration to India's service of a few of its members a generation or two ago, when such consecration, owing to the difficulties of communication, was more or less inevitable. But there is no vital force being generated now. There are no minorities within its ranks, none of those minorities so indispensable to the virility of the majorities to which they belong. There was a Hume a generation ago. Is there a Hume today? In other words, is there a small but compact minority sufficiently intuitive to realise that such changes as may come after the change of Home Rule will inevitably bring Britain and India closer together, provided that the change from which they themselves spring is dedicated and consecrated to the service of the empire and to the closer relations between the two great branches of the Aryan family? The reason why the ruling caste as a whole fears to declare for Home Rule is that it would be called upon to sacrifice much of its prestige and many of its prejudices . . . . But there is another alternative, an alternative to be grasped only by those who truly believe that out of sympathy and generosity trust alone can grow. It is to take the nature of ulterior changes for granted, if only the initial change be broad-based on good will and on an earnest endeavour to promote the happiness of the community even at the cost of prejudices dear to the caste called on to make the sacrifice.

"The alternative is open to the ruling caste in India and to the people of Great Britain. If the former are great enough to risk their welfare on the certainty that good alone proceeds from generous action, they will be as the Saumarai of Japan—ever honoured for their Imperial spirit and forming an imperishable bond of union between east and west. But they may lose their chance. Self-centred, proud, arrogant in self-conscious rectitude, they may be blind to the crisis in their fate. Still, between this great empire and the fate of its predecessors, will remain the British people, grown strong through a mighty ordeal of suffering and high resolve. The war has trained Great Britain to recognise the power of sacrifice as well as to know both the price and the worth of liberty. . . . . And the Indian people shall see beyond their rulers the generous enthusiasm of their British fellow-subjects: 'We have bought our freedom at the price of many weeping and lonely hearts. Out of your fellowship with us, you shall have amidst rejoicing that liberty which has come to us in sorrow. In return, consecrate yourselves with us to the service of the world, so that our empire may be a blessing and not as all other empires have been hitherto, a curse.'"

10. New India, of the 23rd October, has the following:—"In our fight with our powerful enemy, the Press Act, we may use many forms of attack; the frontal attack by the first petition on the merits, bound to fail, unless we had a miraculous bench, determined to use common sense, equity, and the vital necessity for preserving the liberty of the press to construe the words of the Press Act on the lines which were pretended to be laid down for its use in the Legislature, instead of those embodied in the Act. Then we have the flank attack of the second petition, successful in winning the fortress of the law, and a declaration that the imposition of security was illegal, so giving us an impregnable ground, from which to attack the security and the forfeiture. Our reserves are in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the appeal to the King-Emperor. 'Sniping' is also useful at odd moments, and may consist of pamphlets and leaflets dealing with the Press Act, of resolutions against it in Conferences and in Congress, of general agitation for its repeal."

panic-trials ? There must be some other man unfortunate enough to have the same name. No English Government would allow so provocative an appointment, one so fraught with mischief. Even Mr. Austen Chamberlain could hardly do this. But, perhaps, he 'does not know' anything of the Sinhalese tragedy."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 27th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 27th October, says:—"Mr. Eardley Norton has sent a letter to the Englishman on Sir Robert Chalmers' administration of Ceylon. With his characteristic and sincere force he has hurled himself to protect Bengal from the rule of a man who has been completely discredited. . . . . We do not know the truth behind the rumour about Sir Robert Chalmers; but if there is anything of truth in it, we hope this agitation will not have been in vain. India is far too advanced for statesmen of the school of martial law and no damned nonsense. Any one who succeeds Lord Carmichael must possess his characteristics of transparent honesty of purpose and complete association with the people to achieve any success. But we are not concerned with the success of any European as administrator in Bengal as with the harm he may do if he fails. Sir Bamfylde Fuller was responsible for an all-India agitation against his ways, although he ruled over a portion of Bengal. Bengal is the light-house of political India. Any agitation there takes the form of a national grievance. The partition of Bengal was as much felt by the South Indian or the Punjabee as by the Babu. If Sir Robert should enact his Ceylon drama at Calcutta, the recoil will affect not only Bengal, but all India. When Lord Carmichael was transferred from Madras to Bengal it was on the principle that the best man should be for Bengal. We sincerely hope that this principle will not be forgotten now. It should be the earnest endeavour of the advisers of His Majesty to send back, if possible, a Carmichael to succeed Carmichael."

12. New India, of the 23rd October, remarks:—"The Government of India have refused the request of a member of the Supreme Legislative Council to the effect that replies to interpellations may be placed on the Council table half an hour before the commencement of the meeting. Without that much time, no useful supplementary questions can be asked. We do not know what inconvenience the grant of the request would have caused to the Government. Is it because supplementary questions are irksome ? In this respect the members of the Supreme Council are not so well treated as those of the local Council."

The Imperial Legislative Council.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 24th, 1916.

13. New India, of the 24th October, writes as follows:—

"Profoundly mischievous.

"Most unhappily for this country and the empire, the agitation for saddling India with a crushing war loan has been extended to England; and the last mail brought to us a long letter from the pen of Mr. Webb of Karachi in the Tory Morning Post. This extension of the agitation requires to be fully noted in the interests of this country. People of England are not aware of the abject poverty of India, and if their countrymen should describe in glowing terms the wealth that remains untapped here, the Imperial Government may be induced, against the wishes of the Government of India, to repeat the tragedy of the excise duty. It will certainly be far more calamitous; and the alarm that it will create will certainly be unprecedented. . . . . Certainly is the agitation 'profoundly mischievous'. Apart from the danger to the people, the position of the Government of India will become financially serious if the suggested war loan be raised. Mr. Webb suggests that a loan of, say, £20 millions be raised at 5 or 6 per cent interest, and lent to England. What, let us consider, will be its consequences on India ?

"First, the price of Government paper will drop down at a tremendous rate. Three per cent paper will fall to at least 50, if not much less. . . . . And what will be the consequence of the drop to Rs. 40 or Rs. 50 of the three per cent paper ? What will be the loss to the holders ? Will it be fair to ask them to put up with it; and if so asked, how will they view the Government loans in future? . . . . Secondly, the future of rupee loans will be ruined. For the past few years, a fairly decent sum of money is raised by the Government of India in this country alone, saving thereby a large sum of money which was previously going out as interest. If that policy had been tried here systematically for the past three decades, India need not have now borne a drain of 10 millions sterling paid as interest. The policy of Mr. Webb and his Anglo-patriotic friends will thus result in an annual increase in the drain which every Indian patriot is anxious to decrease.

Mr. Webb and an Indian war loan.

"Thirdly, a fresh blow will be struck at the policy underlying the extension of our public works. At the end of the war, people will have very little money to invest; and the Government of India will probably have to pay a very high interest for the outlay it requires for irrigation and railway schemes. And the higher the rate of interest the less will be the amount proposed to be spent; and such a decrease is disastrous to the country. Our needs require that at least 20 to 30 millions sterling should be spent annually on productive public works, and if the Government of India should have to pay a high rate of interest, they may decide not to spend even as much as they now do.

"In fact Mr. Webb's advice to the Government of India is no other than to kill the goose that now lays the golden egg of the Indian loan."

14. New India, of the 26th October, states:—"This Missionary, the Principal of the Kellett High School, had the insolence to send two of his boys to the Adyar Theosophical Society head-quarters, with a card signed by him, asking for subscriptions for his 'Band of Hope'. Mrs. Annie Besant returned it with the note:

> The Rev. D. G. M. Leith refused a subscription from me for the fishermen's society, and I decline to subject myself again to insult from him.
> ANNIE BESANT.

"Some of his boys came before to Mrs. Besant asking for a subscription to help fishermen, and she gave it. In open meeting the Rev. Mr. Leith insisted on its being returned. She is hardly likely to court a repetition of the insult. Apart from this why should a Christian take advantage of a Hindu festival, which he regards as an idolatrous superstition?"

15. The Hindu, of the 26th October, remarks:—"Anglo-Indian administrators who deprecate the introduction of representative institutions into India and scent sedition in every movement which springs from the people may, with great advantage to the Government they serve, and the people they pride themselves on 'governing', turn their attention more carefully than they have done, to the principles underlying village panchayat organisation in Baroda, Patiala, the Dewas State and Ceylon. The Madras Government have taken a narrow, illiberal and thoroughly unsatisfactory view of the matter and have been promising to do something which the public do not want."

16. The Hindu, of the 26th October, writes:—"A message from Bankipur says that the Express, a local daily paper, has been asked to show cause why it should not furnish security under the Press Act, and that Mr. L. P. Pugh has been engaged on behalf of the journal. While it shows that activity under the Press Act is increasing, it is also clear that the authorities in Behar recognise the fact that requiring security from a newspaper is in the nature of a punitive proceeding, and on the principle that no person should be condemned unheard have given notice to the paper to show cause why security should not be furnished. The action of the Behar Government is probably due to a recent decision of the Patna High Court which set aside an order of the Magistrate demanding security from a printing press which he had originally exempted from it, and which was passed without notice to the party concerned. . . . . Depositing security for a newspaper is of the nature of a temporary deprivation of property, besides the stigma attaching to the conductor of it, of having given cause for it in the eye of the executive authority. A forfeiture of security is a permanent deprivation of property. It is contrary to elementary principles, justice and fairplay that either of these steps should be taken by the Magistrate or the local Government without notice to the person concerned. Such a course is, however, often attempted to be justified on the ground that the act in question is an executive and not a judicial one, that the Press Act does not require notice to be issued before the order or reasons given in support of it. Issuing previous notice and hearing the party affected, as well as giving reasons for making an order prejudicial to a person, are required in order to arrive at the truth and render justice, and to prevent men in authority from doing unintentional wrong. It is want of true perspective which leads some people to think that there can be any essential distinction as regards the application of this principle of justice between acts which are called executive and judicial acts."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 26th, 1916.

The Express and the Press Act.

Indentured emigration.

17. The Hindu, of the 27th October, observes:—"Lord Chelmsford, in the course of his speech at the first meeting of the new Imperial Legislative Council last month, referred in some detail to the action taken by the Government of India on the resolution passed by that Council regarding the abolition of indentured labour. He said that Local Governments were being consulted as to the control that should be exercised over the operations of persons engaged in recruiting labour for the colonies after the abolition of the system of indenture and the precautions that should be taken to prevent the abuses attendant on the recruitment of free labour. His Excellency added that 'the conditions under which we are to allow labour to be recruited in India and under which it should be employed in the colonies are peculiarly matters on which Indian public opinion has every right to be heard, and on which we desire its full expression as an aid to us in formulating our proposals.' If such was the object, the papers connected with the subject, e.g., the despatch of the Government of India recommending the abolition of indenture, the reply of the Secretary of State, the letter to Local Governments and other documents, should have been published several weeks ago. But this has not been done and the public will be left to wonder but for a fortunate circumstance, what mighty problems are being raised and solved in secret communication and despatches in respect of a matter on which however, the Viceroy has desired the fullest discussion. That fortunate circumstance is this: the Colonial Office, with which the India Office has apparently, as may be expected, been in communication, has sent out a despatch, almost identical in terms, to the Colonial Governments interested in the matter and this despatch has been published in the colonies concerned. The methods of the Government in India and the Colonial Governments offer a study in contrast so far as at least as consulting public opinion is concerned. The Colonial Office specially asked the various Governors to lay copies of the despatch before the Legislative Councils at an early date and presumably this has been done. We do not know why the same procedure has not been adopted in India and the papers have not been published so far. It appears ludicrous and humiliating that the Indian public should depend for information on such an important matter on the off-chance of the publication of the papers in distant colony, and precious little freshness will attach to their belated publication in India, should the Government intend at all to do so. . . . . The decision of the Secretary of State for India, formed unwillingly and after so much hesitation, is a tribute to the perserverance and strength with which the agitation in India was carried on, and it is a lesson to Indian leaders of public opinion that their success in any field of Indian reform depends on perseverance, on strength in their statement born of a consciousness of the justice of their cause and on the unanimity with which they approach the authorities. It reflects, in our opinion, however, little credit on Mr. Chamberlain that his decision on a subject concerning the treatment of his fellow-creatures should have depended, as it would appear, more on considerations of political expediency than on those which spring from a love of fellowmen and a noble desire to lift them from the slough of misery. . . . . We must, however, raise a protest against the Secretary for India troubling himself about the economic interests of colonies which have shamefully treated Indian labourers and even now possess laws which are a disgrace to any civilised Government. It is foolish to talk of safeguarding of any interests in the discussion of this question except those which appertain to the afflicted people whose personal liberties have been swept aside by an unnatural system which has, however, made the colonies healthy, wealthy but extremely unwise."

18. New India, of the 27th October, has the following:—"Mr. C. Jinarajadasa is ever alert to correct mistakes and false statements in the English press, as well as ever working for India in other ways. He wrote to the Times:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 27th, 1916.

The London Times.

The reviewer of Mrs. Besant's India: A Nation states that the omission of the Bibliography referred to in the body of the work, is "typical of her disregard of evidence." May I mention that the omission is due to a publishers' error, as Mrs. Besant has explained, and that the Bibliography specially printed by Mrs. Besant is given with each copy sold in India?

"The carelessness of the publishers caused many difficulties; the worst errors were corrected by cable at heavy cost, and the brevity of the introduction was due to their mistake in calculating the number of pages in the manuscript. They have treated us very badly over the book, of which they bought the copyright for a trifling sum, for under 'pressure from Government'—presumably from the Secretary of State for India—they withdrew the book from circulation. I refused the money, and am seeking to recover the copyright, so as to republish the book, which is in great demand. Anyhow, it has gone all over the world, so that America and the self-governing dominions will be able to see how far the boasted liberty of the press prevails in England. Presumably Dadabhai Naoroji's Poverty and Un-British Rule in India, and Digby's Prosperous British India will now be suppressed. Liberty in England is evidently on the down-grade, for, until now, no one has dreamed of objecting to the free circulation of such books, either in England or in India. Lord Morley's prophecy seems to be coming true."

Indian coolies in foreign countries.

20. The Vaisyamitran,* of the 9th October, reproduces an article from the Ceylonese, detailing the cruel way in which the Indian coolies are being treated by the European planters in Ceylon.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

In the course of a leader under this heading, the Swadesamitran, of the 20th October, says:—We now learn that the object of the Government in sending a Civilian and an Indian to Ceylon and Malay States is to ascertain the way in which Indian coolies are recruited for these places to enable it to suggest to the Secretary of State for the Colonies a better method of recruitment, when the system of indentured labour is stopped. If this is true, it will be very disappointing indeed to the Indians. The views expressed by Lord Hardinge when he accepted the resolution of the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohun Malaviya in March last, recommending the abolition of the indentured system of labour, made us hope that the grievances of the coolies emigrating voluntarily would also be redressed soon. It is the duty of the Government of India to protect the Indians from being subjected to hardships wherever they may be, no matter whether they are there as indentured coolies or free coolies. When the system of Indians proceeding to foreign countries as a result of an agreement entered into here is to be prohibited, we cannot see any meaning in allowing the system of their proceeding to foreign countries and entering into an agreement with the planters there to continue. The emigration of coolies from here benefits neither this country nor themselves. On the other hand, it has an adverse effect upon agriculture in this country. But the foreign countries to which the Indians emigrate enrich themselves at the cost of the latter. So the present position is this: the emigration of coolies from India, while it injures the growth of industries here with no corresponding advantage to it, helps to enrich the foreign countries. As it is therefore against the interests of the colonies to lose Indian labour, they will have to consent to any terms proposed by the Government of India, and so neither the Government of India nor the people here need take the colonies into their confidence in deciding these terms. No doubt the Government will not be justified in preventing people from proceeding anywhere they like. But the Government is, at the same time, bound to see that the Indians enjoy equal privileges with other British subjects in every portion of the British Empire. Any foreigner, though he may not be a British subject, is enjoying every privilege in India. Is not the Indian, who is a British subject, entitled to enjoy every privilege in any portion of the British Empire? If the Government of India will take a firm stand on this ground at the conference to be held in London shortly, all the grievances of the Indians in foreign countries will disappear. If the colonies are anxious to take away the Indians as coolies, India is as anxious to prevent the Indians from going outside. So it is the duty of the Government of India to help the Indians in achieving their object, especially when the Colonial Governments are helping the planters in achieving theirs. When the emigration agents induce the people here to go with them, by holding out false hopes, the Government should also apprise our people of the disadvantages of proceeding to foreign countries and it is only such people as are willing to go, after understanding the situation well, that should be permitted to go. Provision should also be made for their leading a happy life in the colonies. It is only then that the people here will believe that the Government of India is taking as much interest in their welfare as the Colonial Governments are taking in their subjects. If the Government wants to follow a system working well elsewhere, it can well adopt the rules subject to which European coolies are working in Australia and apply them to the Indian coolies proceeding outside India.

21. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th October, writes:—Loyalty and union are on the decline in Ireland. Many of the able-bodied citizens are going to the United States of America. They seem to do this in order to escape conscription. The Home authorities, too, are not firm in enforcing the conscription measure in Ireland. They are still hesitating. There is a proverb which says that by delay and inaction, even the elixir of life becomes converted into poison. We have a practical illustration of it in the present case. If conscription is not enforced in Ireland without further delay, the consequences will be serious. The Irish are a strong race. They are very heroic. It is imperative that they should be induced to identify the interests of the empire with their own.

24. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 20th October, writes:—There is no doubt that the longer the war lasts the weaker the German power is becoming. On the other hand, the strength of the Allies is daily increasing, thanks to the powerful aid rendered by Great Britain. The Germans now fully understand that the time of their overthrow is at hand and consequently revolts are of common occurrence in the country.

Stirring speeches in the German Parliament in favour of peace.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The editor, referring to the speeches made in the German Parliament regarding peace, says: "We want to know from the Kaiser and his confidential advisers what is the actual financial and military condition of Germany and how Great Britain by the blockade by her grand fleet has made Germany feel the want of everything. But this is not all, Germany will have to suffer still more for her cruel acts.

25. Referring to the dismissal of these appeals by the three Judges who tried them, the Swadesamitran, of the 19th October, observes:—It is really regrettable that, while admitting that there was nothing objectionable about the aims of New India and the conduct of its editor, two of the Judges should have decided that, as a few articles are objectionable, they could not annul the order of forfeiture of security. We do not deny that every one is bound to abide by this decision. But the observation of the Hindu that many of those who had watched the course and nature of the arguments at the hearing of this case would not have felt that the conclusion now arrived at by the Judges was an inevitable one is quite true. Though the few articles on which the Judges base their decision are no doubt very strong, it is our humble conviction that, in considering their effect, the Judges should have noted the fact that those who perused New India daily were fully aware of the innocuous nature of these articles and the good intention of the editor and that the mischievous ideas contemplated in section 4 of the Press Act could not have therefore been created in their minds on going through these articles. The remarks made by the Judges about the Press Act add one more link to the chain of evidence about the hardships resulting to the newspapers and the public from this piece of legislation. Even the Civilian Judge comments upon the stringency of its provisions, and the other two Judges dwell in detail upon the way in which the Act curtails the liberty of the people. It is really the misfortune of this country that no remedy has yet been found for this by any one.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 19th, 1916.

Adverting to the same subject, the Hindu Nesan, of the 19th October, welcomes the decision as one based on law and justice, and reproduces the comments of the Madras Times on the result of this case.

PRAPANCHA MITRAN, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 20th October, observes:—The Judges have held that only a few of the articles considered to be objectionable by the Government could be deemed to be such, and that there was no doubt whatever about the loyalty of Mrs. Besant. The language of some of the articles is no doubt very strong and some have doubtless been written in a silly spirit. But we do not think, at the same time, that they are so bad as to warrant a security of Rs. 2,000 being forfeited. The decision of the Judges in this case is sure to cause regret throughout India. But what could the Judges do? The Press Act of 1910 is so mighty. All the three Judges who tried this case have expressed their disapproval of the provisions of this Act, and it has been condemned already once by the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court. So our next question is whether an Act, which is condemned by the highest courts of justice, can be allowed to remain in the statute book. We anxiously await the result of the deputation that is to wait upon the Viceroy early next year regarding this Act. We hope the members of the deputation will voice forth the public opinion about this Act truly and boldly and see that it is repealed. The Viceroy may, perhaps, say that the matter will be considered after the war. The press representatives should not immediately thank him and come away. They should try to impress on his mind the public opinion in India on this subject and gain him over.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The Swadesamitran, of the 21st October, reproduces the comments of the following papers on the decision in the New India appeals:—The Panjabee, the Tribune and the Amrita Bazaar Patrika.

DRAVIDABHIMANI, Salem, Oct. 20th, 1916.

New India appeals.

Referring to the dismissal of these appeals, the Dravidabhimani, of the 20th October, says:—Mrs. Annie Besant should not have taken up this attitude. If she had, like Mr. Gokhale, tried to gain the esteem of both the people and the Government, she would have helped this country in numerous ways. By her tenacity in refusing to give up the children of Narayanayya she provoked the displeasure of the people. She has in this case lost the good-will of the Government also.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

The Lokopakari, of the 23rd October, observes:—Though the decision in this case has gone against Mrs. Besant, the remarks of the Judges regarding the nature of the Press Act and the Defence of India Act are favourable to the popular view. A similar opinion has already been expressed by the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, and these opinions will no doubt help Mrs. Besant materially in her appeal before the Privy Council. Mrs. Besant's aim is not to subvert the British Government in India. Her idea is that India should obtain swaraj under the British rule. She is a loyalist, though she is over-enthusiastic in working for the progress of India. She has, of course, been using strong language now and then, and this naturally provokes the officials. Born and bred up in a free land like England, she forgets that she cannot be so free with her pen in India, which is a subject country. If she learns to adapt herself to the times hereafter at least, she will be benefitting us and herself thereby.

26. In pleading for a separate District Court for North Arcot, the Hindu Nesan, of the 19th October, says:—The new North Arcot district comprises wholly of Tamil taluks, and it is not desirable that the litigant public of these taluks should be made to go to a court in the Chittoor district, where the language of the majority of the population is Telugu. The fact that a resolution on this subject in the local Legislative Council fell through last year on account of the opposition of the European members should not prevent our representatives in the council from raking up the question again. The better course will be to invest the South Arcot district Court with the power of trying suits from the North Arcot district. Comparing the population of the North Arcot and Chittoor districts, we may even go to the length of saying that cases from the the Chittoor district can well be tried in a District Court at Vellore. When the Chittoor district, with a population of 1,238,742, has a separate District Court, it goes without saying that the North Arcot district with a population of 1,960,960 should have one. Districts whose population is far less than that of the North Arcot district have already separate District Courts, and His Excellency Lord Pentland gave an assurance in 1914 to the people of Anantapur that they would soon have a separate District Court, though the population of this district is only 963,229. Perhaps it may be argued that District Courts are not established with reference to the population of districts. Even if the number of cases should be the criterion for a district having a separate court, we do not think that the number of cases from the North Arcot district will be too small to justify its claim for a separate court.

A District Court for North Arcot.

27. In commenting on the review of the Government on the administration of civil justice in this Presidency in 1915, the Hindu Nesan, of the 23rd October, observes:—While we are glad that the Government has decided to act on the recommendation of Mr. Justice Phillips that the existing Bench Courts in villages should be replaced by panchayat courts, we are not able to understand the nature and provisions of the Bill the Government proposes to introduce on this subject. For aught we can judge from the words of the elected members in the Legislative Council, we do not think the panchayats to be constituted by the Government will be on lines approved by the people. We wish the rules relating to the establishment of panchayats framed by the Government of the United Provinces are adopted here. The panchayats there have both executive and judicial powers and have also independent sources of income. If the panchayats in this Presidency are also given similar powers their establishment will be welcomed by the people.

Administration of civil justice in 1915.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

Coming to the regret expressed by the Government at the increase of arrears of civil cases in the year we would point out that this state of affairs cannot be remedied unless and until the system of appointing raw Civilians with no knowledge or experience of judicial work, as District Judges, is given up.

Adverting to the remarks of the Government about the delay in the disposal of civil cases, the Swadesamitran, of the 23rd October, expresses the opinion that the Government cannot expect matters to improve unless there is a complete separation of judicial and executive functions.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

28. Referring to the judgment in the New India case, the Andhrapatrika, of the 23rd October, says:—The decision of the High Court Judges is disappointing to the public, although, as stated by the Judges, it is not opposed to the provisions of the Press Act. The intention of the Legislature has not been made clear. The vocation of the journalist has become insupportably irksome. The Executive and the Judicial Departments differ in their opinions; and it is not possible for the journalist to settle that difference. The journalist can never enjoy any peace of mind unless and until the Press Act is repealed. We hope that the efforts of Mrs. Besant before the Privy Council will be crowned with success and newspapers freed from bondage.

New India case.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 21st October, says :—The decision of the High Court in the New India case need not disappoint anybody. It has been made plain that the Press Act is not only a menace to the freedom of the press, but is also a restraint on the independence of the High Court. Laws there must exist in every country and those that violate them ought to be punished. But it is opposed to the fundamental rights of man that the accused is punished without being heard. The Judges of the High Court stated that the order of the Magistrate was illegal, but that they could not set it aside under the Press Act. When the Act thus stands in the way of the High Court giving an independent judgment, what wonder is there in its violating the rights of the people? There can be no freedom for the papers till that repressive measure is removed from the Indian Statute Book. It is a sort of gag. Statesmen have often been telling that the evil consequences of gagging the press outweigh those of granting freedom to it. Repressive measures engender disaffection between the rulers and the ruled, and lessen confidence in constitutional agitation. Such disaffection and want of confidence do not tend to the advantage of the country or of the empire.

YOGAKSHAMAM, Trichur, Oct. 20th, 1916.

New India case.

Referring to the decision of the Madras High Court in the appeals preferred by Mrs. Besant, the Yogakshamam, of the 20th October, points out that this decision, like that of the Calcutta High Court two years ago, proves the impotence of the High Courts to protect the people against the high-handedness of the executive, and observes that such a state of things cannot be deemed as creditable to any enlightened Government.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 20th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Manorama, of the 20th October, also draws attention to the severity of the Press Act, as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Abdur Rahim, the Acting Chief Justice, and the late Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, and hopes that the Government of India will be graciously pleased to remove the objectionable sections from the Act, particularly section 4 thereof, which confers enormous powers on the executive, and thus restore freedom to the press to pass just and reasonable criticisms on the various measures of the Government.

New India case.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 21st October, the Lokaprakasam, of the 23rd October and the Keralodayam, of the 24th October, express disappointment at the decision of the Madras High Court in the New India cases, which, in their opinion, reveals the severity of the Press Act, and invite the attention of the Government and the leaders of the people to the necessity of amending the Act.

Crimes and poverty in India.

29. Referring to the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment passed on Vibhuti Bushan Bose by a Magistrate in Calcutta, and to the subsequent statement of the accused that he committed the offence because he had no means of maintaining himself, the Keralodayam, of the 24th October, points out that the punishment in his case is evidently no punishment at all, and that for such a person the proper place was a "work-house", which, however, does not, as in other countries, exist in India, and observes that it is high time that the Government and the leaders of the people realised the extreme poverty of the people and its resultant evils, and discovered remedies therefor.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

Necessity of teaching political science to Indian youths.

30. The Lokaprakasam, of the 23rd October, supports the view of New India that political science should be taught in all the schools and colleges in India, and observes that the Government, who now admit that the Indians clamour for self-government to be a just one, ought to allow its being included in the curricula of studies, and that they should likewise enable the older people to conduct the administration of villages, taluks and districts themselves.

The Science Institute at Bangalore.

31. Referring to the interpellation of the Hon'ble Sir Curimbhoy regarding the Institute of Science at Bangalore, the Keralodayam, of the 24th October, regrets that it should have fallen to Sir Sankaran Nayar to give such a disappointing reply, but thinks that, whatever the reply might be, those who know Sir Sankaran Nayar and the Government of India may console themselves with the hope that the Government will do the needful in the matter, so that the objects, with which the institution was started, may be attained.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 24th, 1916.

(e) Local and Municipal.

The Mangalore Municipality.

32. In a leading article commenting on the annual report on the administration of the municipality of Mangalore, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 20th October, observes:—One prominent fact which is evident from this report is the deplorable lack of public interest in municipal affairs. Not only were the members extremely indifferent in the matter of attendance at the meetings of the council, but there was absolutely no contest for seven of the vacancies which were to be filled up by election in the course of the year. Another important shortcoming of our municipal administration is that, although large amounts are being expended on the repair of roads, the condition of the roads is hardly satisfactory. The Collector has noticed this point and the Government too have expressed their regret on it. One other point in this connection, however, which, neither the Collector nor the Government have noticed, is that just as some of the congested quarters in the Golikatte ward have been considerably protected against the ravages of plague since the opening up of new roads in this quarter during Khan Bahadur Aziz ud-din Sahib's time, there are other parts of the city, particularly the market and central wards, requiring preventive steps against plague. But, while even the existing roads are not able to receive sufficient attention in regard to their upkeep, how is it possible to expect that new roads will be constructed? The Government have said that in view of the large amount to be expended on the Wenlock Hospital, the proposal in regard to the acquisition of a new site for the women and children's hospital should lie over for some time. When such is the attitude of Government all that we can urge on them is that along with half the cost of the new hospital which they have consented to give, they may give the other 60 thousand too as a gift and not as a loan, so as to add to the gratitude of the people. The Government had remarked on a previous occasion that the municipality does not seem to have been as liberal in regard to education as it has shown itself in regard to the repair of roads and sanitation. It is probably as a result of this remark that the municipality is proposing to increase the number of classes in the elementary school at Bolar and to take the management of the Kankanady school under its own management. The Collector, however, remarked that, in view of the ample facilities which the city was already enjoying in regard to education, it was not necessary for the municipality to incur any great expenditure in this direction. But this opinion does not seem to be based upon a full acquaintance with the facts. By educational facilities the Collector probably means the facilities for secondary and collegiate education. Although the latter facilities there are, the city is without adequate provision in respect of elementary education. It is to remove this defect that the municipality is trying; and the Government, too, are suggesting the same, and it is not their object to establish secondary schools, as the Collector seems to think. Further, even as regards the secondary institutions, the majority are in the hands of the Missionaries. Is there a single institution which the municipality can call its own? Although the existing secondary schools have also the elementary classes in them, these form only a secondary feature of these institutions and that is very natural. It will be seen, therefore, how imperative it is that the municipality should turn its attention to the spread of elementary education and establish elementary or higher elementary schools of its own or take some existing institutions of this class under its own management. For, of all public needs what can be more real than education? That is why the Government do not seem to have attached much weight to the view taken by the Collector. For the Government have asked for information regarding the expenditure involved by the proposals to increase the number of classes in the Bolar school and to place the Kankanady school under municipal management. This is admittedly satisfactory. The Government have further held out considerable hopes in regard to other important improvements, such as the construction of water works. When the Government are so sympathetically disposed, if the municipal body should, at the same time, seem more conscious of its duties and responsibilities, as we have said above, these rights of local self-government will serve as an object lesson to the people on the art of self-government.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Oct. 20th, 1916.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The powers of municipalities and local boards in regard to primary education.

33. In continuation of the article on this subject (vide Report No. 43, article 31), the Swadeshabhimani, of the 20th October, writes:—In our last issue we praised the liberality of the Government of India in giving larger powers to local bodies. We now propose to make a few suggestions as to how the Madras Government should carry out the policy indicated by the Government of India. The non-official Presidents of municipalities will have no great difficulty in exercising effective supervision over the educational activity in the municipal area. It is important, however, that the municipal councils should have some member of the Educational department to guide the other members of the council. In the absence of this guidance, in cases where the President of the municipality happens to consider it beneath his dignity to inspect the elementary schools, the latter will come to be ill-managed owing to want of supervision. We see, for example, that for the past five years, the Mangalore Municipality had no Educational officer on its council. We wonder why this has not been brought to the notice of the Collector. If the council were to include an Educational officer, the Collector would not have remarked in his review of the administration report of the municipality, that as there were a number of private schools within the municipality, there was no need for the municipality to establish fresh schools. He would have remarked, instead, that as the existing private institutions are mostly Christian, there was need for some non-Missionary schools for the benefit of the backward classes. Further, as the private schools levy fees, the backward classes would have benefited by these municipal schools in regard to their exemption from the payment of the school fees. The functions of the local boards are gradually increasing and extend over a large area and they have no separate educational section corresponding to the present engineering section. The supervision of the local board schools will thus wholly devolve on the officers of the Government Educational department. With the increase of the powers of the local bodies, these officers will naturally feel less of personal responsibility in regard to these schools and treat them like the other schools within their range. Except, therefore, where there is a President of the type of Mr. S. Raghunathayya who is so conscientious and painstaking as to visit even the most distant village schools, the institutions under the local boards will go without effective control. Further, as the Government have not given full effect to the provision about the appointment of non-officials as Presidents of local boards, it is easy to see what amount of attention the Revenue Divisional-officers, who are now at the head of these bodies, will be able to give to the schools under them. Under these circumstances, it would seem necessary to entrust the supervision of these schools either to the vice-president wholly, or to a committee consisting of the vice-president, the Educational officer of the board and one other enthusiastic non-official member of the board. The school committees, as at present constitued, will be of little avail for the purpose indicated above.

As the Collector, as the head of the district, has a voice in the working of every department in his district, we fail to see why the circular makes specific reference to the power of the Collector to ask the board to establish a new school wherever he deems necessary. We fail to see what purpose is served by this fresh restraint on the larger powers given to the local bodies. The Collector's suggestions are naturally as weighty as orders. There was no need, therefore, for separate provision for Collector's orders.

The circular further states that the permission of the Collector or of the Director is necessary for closing an existing school. Here, too, it was enough to provide for the Director's sanction alone.

The circular says that the Educational department will prepare a list of different courses of study, and that the local bodies may select any particular group from this list to suit the requirements of their own institutions. Unless the members take the trouble of understanding the purpose aimed at by each particular group, this new method will be sure to hinder the spread and progress of education.

We welcome the proposal that the local boards should have full powers in spending any amount on education up to the proportion of their income hitherto spent by each body, prior to the system of Government grants. But the boards have not hitherto been maintaining a uniform proportion in this respect. Some were liberal, others have been somewhat miserly. It would therefore be well to prescribe the minimum proportion of its income which each municipality or local board should spend on education.

It is also seen that it is proposed to gradually convert the secondary schools under the Local Boards into Government institutions and to free the local bodies from the burden of providing for secondary education. These secondary institutions under the boards, not being in receipt of Government aid, have to depend wholly on the income which they get in the shape of school fees. Most of these schools, therefore, are without proper apparatus or other equipment. We, therefore, most eagerly look forward to the time when the Government would transfer this burden to their own shoulders.

(g) Forests.

Forest panchayats.

34. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th October, writes on the subject of forest panchayats as follows:—As Mr. Davis had other duties also to perform, he was not able to do much in the direction of forming forest panchayats. He visited certain districts, and the board has resolved that these being the only districts which desired the panchayats most, Mr. Davis need not go about on this business any more. We are unable to understand how the Board came to this conclusion and how the Government accepted it. Nobody has defined the grounds on which to determine which parts of the country were fit to have panchayats and which not. We cannot see how the Kurnool district, a third of whose extent is covered by forests, was not deemed fit to be visited by Mr. Davis. Was it because the people of this district are voiceless? The people were in the beginning given to understand that there was need for the formation of thousands of forest panchayats and that one-eighth of the forest area had to be brought under their management. It is now disappointing to hear that the special officer has been called back. If the work of forming panchayats is left to the ordinary district authorities, and the Government keep quiet, it will never progress.

British Empire after the war, and these may necessitate changes in the Indian administration. It seems our late Viceroy Lord Hardinge had already sent a note to England detailing the reforms which were to be introduced in India after the war; and it appears the present Viceroy is also in correspondence with the Secretary of State for India on this subject. We do not see why the reforms to be introduced here should be kept a secret from the Indians. We may not be quite sure of matters which are disposed of so secretly being favourable to the people. But our representatives in the Imperial Legislative Council have woke up. They have submitted a memorandum suggesting the reforms which are necessary. Even the Indian Patriot, which shivers at the very mention of the word swaraj, admits that the reforms suggested are very reasonable. But some English papers cannot tolerate it. What do we care if they bark? All the British Colonies are scheming to ride over India and India seeks to obtain the liberty to which she is entitled. How can we say what will happen? Let the Almighty decide.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 19th, 1916.

Sir Robert Chalmers.

37. The Andhrapatrika, of the 19th October, reports the Amrita Bazaar Patrika to have stated:—We hear that Sir Robert Chalmers is to succeed Lord Carmichael as the Governor of Bengal. He was for some time Governor of Ceylon, but he was called back to England. In his opinion, the Ceylon riots were due to religious causes, but he introduced the martial law to put them down. His appointment to enquire into the Irish "case" was adversely criticised by the English press. The rulers could not send a worse man as our Governor. He lacks the chief virtue of a good statesman, namely, a kind attitude towards the subjects. The hardships of the Bengalis under such an unkind Governor will certainly increase a thousandfold. Sir Robert Chalmers may possess a magnanimous mind. But the days of his "Zaburdust" are now gone. We hope that the Secretary of State for India will not commit the mistake of forcibly thrusting upon us one like Sir Robert Chalmers, who proved a failure as a ruler. Bengal does not deserve such punishment. We pray that Lord Carmichael may be retained as the Governor of our Province till the termination of the war.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The Bombay Provincial Conference.

38. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st October, gives a Telugu version of the portion of the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah, President of the Bombay Provincial Conference, relating to self-government for India, containing the following:—The bureaucratic system of Government has outlived its usefulness. Though angels are brought down from the heaven and made I.C.Ss., the defects of the above system will make them retard progress.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The gold standard reserve in London.

39. Referring to the Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma's question in the Imperial Legislative Council, relating to the balances of the gold standard reserve in London, the Andhrapatrika, of the 20th October, says:—We regret that the answer of the Hon'ble Sir William Meyer is not satisfactory. He stated that he had no information as to the arrangements made by the Secretary of State on the 31st March 1916 in regard to the moneys of the gold standard reserve. It is strange that the Financial Member of the Government of India is in such a helpless ignorance. But what can he do? The Secretary of State for India is all in all. It is for this reason that our representatives have suggested the abolition of the India Office.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

Poverty in India.

40. The Andhrapatrika, of the 21st October, reports the Modern Review to have stated as follows:—It is the greatest of catastrophes that crores of Indians are very poor. The sovereign remedy for this is self-government. . . . . The children of a nation are its priceless treasure. It is the duty of the Government to see that every boy and every girl are properly fed and educated, and keep good health. The Government that neglect to do so certainly commit the sin of omitting their first and foremost duty. The Indians have been declining for generations past without proper education.

Powers of a Viceroy.

41. Referring to the remark of Lord Chelmsford that it is desirable to extend the Viceroy's powers of nomination to his Legislative Council, a correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 18th October, says:—If, as desired, Lord Chelmsford's powers of nomination be increased, the object with which the Minto-Morley reforms were introduced will be defeated, the views of the nominated members in the Legislative Council will prevail over those of the representatives of the people, and room will be given for the public to remark that Lord Curzon's administration was much better than that of Lord Chelmsford. Sir William Wedderburn's reference to the Viceroy's Executive Council and his suggestion to invest him with the power to nominate members to that council, were due to a mistake, the result of inaccurate report sent to England of the speech of the Viceroy. Those who send news to England are mostly English people, and it is no matter for surprise that they stand in the way of our progress, when we remember the fact that foreign Missionaries, who profess faith in Jesus Christ, misrepresent the Indians, and bring down upon them the contempt of the foreigners.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 18th, 1916.

Andhra regiments.

42. A correspondent to the Kistnapatrika, of the 21st October, writes under this heading:—We must, of course, lay down our lives in the service of the empire; but we have been strangers to arms for over a century and a half, and even the warrior castes among us do not know how to wield a sword; how, then, will the ordinary folk among us join the regiments on a mere call to do so and fight in foreign countries? Life is dearest to us; and it requires very strong imperial devotion to jump to the war front at the sacrifice of it. . . . The European nations are entering the battlefield to save their wives and children and hearth and home, and not for their monthly wages. We, under the benign British rule, are not exposed to any calamity; and the ordinary people cannot realise that their calamity is ours. If at any future time our rulers think that our country is exposed to danger, they may provide the means to ward it off; but delay is dangerous. They will do well to make a beginning now, by annulling the Arms Act and providing for the formation of volunteer corps in every district. Then may people gradually join them. If they, as in the western countries, establish Military and Naval Colleges in this country, the scions of noble families may receive training in them and take to military service. That some of us should wax eloquent in declaring unmindful of the above considerations, that it is ignominious on our part not to join the army is ridiculous. What can we do by going to the front in the present furious war? Where is the necessary training and where the powerful motive? . . . . . Even the warlike castes such as Reddis, Kshatriyas and Velamas will not join the army for pay. The sepoys enlisted in military service must, of course, fight. . . . . Our leaders, Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Lajput Rai, are themselves at variance as to how far "Ahimsa" (desisting from giving pain) is an ideal of duty, and some are of opinion that we have to await a decision of this question. . . . . In any case, our demands for the abolition of the Arms Act, for the formation of volunteer corps, and for the establishment of Military and Naval Colleges are idle desires so long as we have no self-government granted to us as in the colonies. We cannot be useful to our rulers in war until that is granted.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The post-war settlement in India.

43. Referring to the memorandum on the post-war settlement in India submitted to His Excellency the Governor-General by nineteen of the elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the Kistnapatrika, of the 21st October, says:—The authors of this memorandum did not, before submitting it, consult their electorates on its subject-matter. This was not proper on their part and it is not conducive to the good of the public or of the country.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The progress of industries in the United Provinces.

44. In an article dwelling on the importance of seizing the opportunity afforded by the war for developing Indian industries, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 24th October, warmly applauds the active efforts of the Government of the United Provinces in this direction.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 24th, 1916.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 26th, 1916.

45. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 26th October, writes:—In an article appearing in the Commonweal, Mrs. Besant writes that at the close of the war the British will form an Imperial Council including representatives from their colonies, such as Australia and Canada, that India will be excluded from this council, that the Indians will be discontented thereby and that this will lead them to try to dissociate themselves from the British connection. The British Ministers and the leaders of the British colonies will, we may presume, never take such an injudicious step. The whole empire has a population of 600 millions, of which more than 300 millions are Indians. We cannot believe that the British will be ready to face the discontentment of such large numbers. The British politicians are not blind to the terrible consequences of political blunders. As they sow, so must they reap. We cannot believe that the British will blunder in this respect.

India and the war

BHARATA KESARI, Trivandrum, Oct. 18th, 1916.

46. The Bharata Kesari, of the 18th October, also approves of the memorandum submitted to the Viceroy by a majority of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council, the contents of which are, in its opinion, identical with those demanded for a long time by the educated public.

Memorandum of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Oct. 21st, 1916.

47. The Kerala Patrika, of the 21st October, notes with satisfaction that the Government have, agreeably to the wishes of the people, appointed a civilian and an Indian in place of Mr. Todhunter to enquire into the condition of the Indian coolies in Ceylon, thinks that the Government of Ceylon and the planters will realise the evil character of their laws relating to labour and modify them, only if obstacles are thrown in the way of emigration of coolies from this country, and hopes that the present enquiry will produce some good results.

Indian coolies in Ceylon.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Oct. 21st, 1916.

48. The Kerala Patrika, of the 21st October, dwells upon the grievances of the fishermen of the West Coast as enumerated in their address to His Excellency the Governor, and hopes that their prayers, being for the redress of genuine grievances, will not meet with the same fate as those in such addresses generally do.

Grievances of the fishermen of the West Coast.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

49. The Lokaprakasam, of the 23rd October, advocates the appointment of a Commission of Indian chiefs, as prayed for by the Rani of Jobat in her appeal to the Viceroy against the order of the Government of the Central Provinces, as these chiefs are, in its opinion, better qualified to deal with such matters than the British people, and yearns, as other Indians do, for the day when all similar cases will be enquired into and decided by Commissions composed of Indian rulers.

A Rani's appeal.

III.—LEGISLATION.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

50. The Andhrapatrika, of the 20th October, quotes statistics to show that the authorities have been carefully reducing the number of licenses granted under the Arms Act in the Madras Presidency, and observes that this has been especially the case in respect of licenses to possess arms for purposes of self-defence and hunting. It says: If this policy should continue any longer, it will not take long for the people to become more helpless than at present. Papers like the Times of India have been demanding for the Indians equal rights with the Europeans to bear arms. We cannot describe how the feelings of the people will be affected by the news that even former licenses are being cancelled in this country just at a time when the subjects of the empire all over the world are enthusiastic about wearing arms and defeating their enemy. There is no use undertaking to amend the Arms Act or relaxing its operation. It will be well to repeal the law altogether.

The Arms Act.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 20th, 1916.

51. Referring to the dismissal of Mrs. Besant's appeal to the High Court to set aside the order of the Presidency Magistrate demanding security from her and to cancel the Government order declaring the security deposited by her forfeited, and also to the judgment of the High Court on her Revision Petition, to revise the order of the Presidency Magistrate requiring security from her, the Andhraprakasika, of the 18th October, says :—It can indisputably be stated that the result of Mrs. Besant's appeal and Revision Petition is positive proof of the arbitrary character of the Press Act, and the helplessness of the newspaper press. We suggest that the leaders of the people will spare no pains to get the Press Act amended.

The Press Act.

IV.—Native States.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

52. Writing on the increasing usefulness of the Representative Assembly of Mysore, the Vrittanta Patrika, of the 26th October, remarks :—We may say that the assembly has wholly fulfilled the expectations which were formed of it by the late Diwan Rangacharlu who first brought it into being. The newly-granted privilege of holding a second session every year will, we are sure, afford the members increased opportunities of displaying their loyalty and patriotism. If the assembly is to discuss also legislative measures its number doubtless requires to be reduced. No purpose is served by discussing an important subject only for an hour or two. It is everywhere customary to announce at the outset whether it is proposed to take votes at the end of the discussion, in which case it may take a different trend altogether. It would, therefore, be an unheard of procedure not to announce beforehand the intention to take votes, and to ask for votes all of a sudden. Further, the point which is put to vote should be definitely worded, so as to leave no room for ambiguity. Again, where a subject, whether of a legislative nature or not, concerns the whole province, it should first be discussed in the Legislative assembly. Important district or local matters may be disposed of on the spot at the district head-quarters by a council consisting of the Diwan, the councillors and the district officers, meeting every two years, so that the grievances of every district may be heard and remedied instantly, thus obviating the need for lengthy correspondence and consequent protraction.

Vrittanta Patrika, Mysore, Oct. 26th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 25th October, in the course of a leading article, says that the grant of the privilege of holding a second session of the assembly every year and the establishment of a University in Mysore, are two excellent illustrations of the efficacy of rightful agitation pointed out by our popular leaders. The paper remarks that, as the Diwan observed in the concluding words of his address, the Government is ever ready to grant every reasonable request of the people, and it behoves the latter therefore not merely to point out the shortcomings of the administration, but to suggest, at the same time, the best means of remedying them. The privilege of discussing the budget in the Representative Assembly is very valuable. The more, therefore, the members try to study the financial problems of the State, the greater will be its economic progress, and the more complete the fulfilment of His Highness' desire to promote the well-being of his subjects.

Vokkaligara Patrike, Bangalore City, Oct. 25th, 1916.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

Commenting on an article on this subject, which appeared in the Madras Mail, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 23rd October, writes:—The Mail suggests that in view of the great importance of legislative work, the Legislative Council should be a wholly separate body altogether. Mr. Srinivas Rao (a coffee planter) who is a most experienced member of the Representative Assembly, has been urging the Government to consider why the Legislative Council should not be made a sub-committee of this assembly. He asks whether there are any Legislative Councils in countries where there is a parliament. The Legislative Council should only be a part of the Representative Assembly and not separate from it and no measure should be passed unless the assembly discusses and approves it. Our Government seem to have decided not to enact any measure against the wishes of the people. The privilege of holding a second session of the assembly is probably an indication of this policy. The Mail discusses whether such an assembly would be possible in British territory, and concludes that it is not possible owing to its vast extent. Where there is a will there is a way. Is not the United States of America larger than India in extent? Is there no Representative Assembly there? Is not the congress wielding more power than the British Parliament? To a Government which wants to govern in accordance with the wishes of the people, nothing is more important than a Representative Assembly. In the British territory too, if the Local Government should appoint local popular representatives in each Presidency and these representatives should form an Imperial Council, and acquaint the Government with the wants and wishes of the people, the British Sovereignty in India will be more stable than ever. If, on the other hand, the Government should be disposed to wield autocratic powers and fail to give effect to this scheme, it is difficult to say whether the British Government will remain permanent or not. A million rulers sought to govern this country. Even the names of many of these have been forgotten now. So long as a Government is benign and righteous, no harm can ever come to it. The moment righteousness is abandoned, the Government becomes poisoned, as it were. All rulers would do well to consider this. Mysore was the first to lay the foundation of democratic rule in India by means of its Representative Assembly. The result is an absolute identity of interests between the Government and the people. If the British authorities in India would like to produce the same result in their territory, they should likewise organise a parliamentary body in India. The Mail has congratulated the Representative Assembly on the ability with which its members took part in the discussions. This is really surprising. For it is seldom that the Mail recognises the ability of the Indians.

Sampad Abhudaya, Mysore, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

DESABHIMANI, Quilon, Oct. 14th, 1916; KERALEEYABHIMANI, Mavelikkara, Oct. 18th, 1916.

Recruiting scandals in Travancore.

53. The Desabhimani, of the 14th, and the Keraleeyabhimani, of the 18th October, also draw attention to the recruiting scandals in Travancore.

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Oct. 20th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Malayala Manorama, of the 20th October, condemns the conduct of certain village officers in Travancore in spreading all sorts of stories among the innocent people about recruitment, with a view to obtaining illegal gratifications, and takes the opportunity to exhort the people to join the army and thereby help His Majesty's Government at this critical juncture.

DESABHIMANI, Quilon, Oct. 14th, 1916.

Mysore administration.

54. The Desabhimani, of the 14th October, also pays a tribute to the Mysore Darbar for the rapid strides the State has made in recent years, and observes that this administration testifies to the immense advantage to a country, if it is ruled over by able and sympathetic administrators.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

1. The Hindu, of the 30th September, has the following:—"We publish elsewhere an extraordinary minute, signed by all the Judges of the Supreme Court of Ceylon in which their Lordships lay down that the publication by newspapers of ex parte statements made in plaints and answers and petitions of appeal would amount to contempt of Court . . . . Publication of pleadings and other documents produced in Court in the regular manner and commenting on cases before courts are two quite different things, and it is an extremely doubtful point how far the dictum of the Ceylon Supreme Court in that case is sound, and the citation of that case in support of their extremely illiberal rule by the present Judges relevant or proper . . . . The Supreme Court of Ceylon, it appears to us, have failed to apprehend the very serious nature of proceedings for contempt and the great care that should be exercised in committing persons. The decision as to what constitutes contempt should depend on the particular facts of the case and other details that may be brought forward to support the motion. But to lay down as a rule, applicable to all cases and in all circumstances, that every publication of documents of the nature referred to constitutes contempt is a preposterous order for which there is no justification either in law or precedent or commonsense."

The Supreme Court of Ceylon.

Hindu, Madras, Sept. 30th, 1916.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

2. The following appears in New India of the 30th October:—

"The P.D.D.

"The forces of distrust and repression appear to be accumulating. The last claim of a Bombay Magistrate is to force the Criminal Investigation Department officially on the Ahmedabad Conference, so as 'to ensure by its police officers decent and orderly conduct of the proceedings in public meetings'. The Magistrate does not explain how three Criminal Investigation Department reporters could ensure decency and order if they were disturbed, nor does he say on what grounds he apprehends, failing their presence, indecency and disorder in a conference attended and controlled by the most eminent Indians in the Bombay Presidency. Of course, we all know that Criminal Investigation Department reporters or misreporters attend all our meetings and no objection is raised to their presence. But to force them officially on a meeting of citizens is a gross insult, implying that the directors of the meeting are potential or actual criminals who need to be investigated."

The Criminal Investigation Department.

New India, Madras, Oct. 30th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 31st October, says:—"Further light is thrown on the strange and illegal proceedings of the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad in insisting on the admission of Criminal Investigation Department reporters to the pandal where the proceedings of the Provincial Conference were held, by the publication of the whole correspondence on the subject. It appears that these reporters tried in the first place to be present as spectators, paying for their seats; but the places allotted were considered unsuitable for reporting. The Secretaries of the Conference refused to have seats reserved for them with the ordinary reporters for very proper reasons —any other course would have been stultifying. The District Magistrate, thereupon, threatened the Secretaries that he would be compelled 'under the powers' vested in him by law, to take such action as he deemed fit, if proper accommodation were refused. He added that the Government had the right to make arrangements for the reporting by their own reporters of all speeches and proceedings at a public conference and asked the Secretaries not to offer any obstruction to the admission of the Criminal Investigation Department reporters. We are amused by the delicious little statement made by the District Magistrate that the Government had the right to have reports of meetings taken by their own reporters. The Government had every right to do anything they liked, provided they acted according to law. But there is no law in existence which can compel the organisers of a regularly conducted meeting to admit Criminal Investigation Department reporters or any reporters for that matter. The Secretaries wrote back to the irate District Magistrate asking him what provision of law enabled him to get Criminal Investigation Department reporters admitted into the hall, irrespective of the consent of the conference authorities. The District Magistrate could apparently lay his hands on no specific provision. He shifted his ground and without trying to answer the Secretaries, passed the following order:—'In view of the refusal of the Executive Committee of the XVI Bombay Provincial Conference, Ahmedabad, to admit the reporters of the Criminal Investigation Department to the pandal, and of the general right of Government to ensure by its Police officers the decent and orderly conduct of proceedings in public meetings, I hereby order the Executive Committee of the above-mentioned Conference to admit the Criminal Investigation Department reporters and other Police officers to the Conference 'pandal' throughout the duration of the Conference, and offer no obstruction to them in the execution of their duties.' It is the deliberate misrepresentation to say that the Executive Committee refused to admit the reporters when the latter had specifically written to say that they would be admitted, provided they came in the manner provided for the admission of the public into the pandal. But this pales into insignificance by the side of the other undignified and illegal acts of the Magistrate. Seeing that the Secretaries were firm, the Magistrate, in order to show that he was acting under some legal authority, expressed himself for the first time, as being troubled with a doubt whether the proceedings of the Conference would be conducted in a decent and orderly manner, and ordered the Conference authorities to admit reporters and Police officers. The Magistrate had not mentioned anything about his fear as to the orderly conduct of the proceedings till then; it was an after-thought which does that functionary little credit for fairness and right-mindedness. It is incomprehensible, moreover, how reporters will help in maintaining order or preventing disturbance at the meeting—and the object of the order was merely to have these men admitted. The Magistrate's action from beginning to end was illegal and bereft of the courtesy, tact, and ordinary prudence which anything proceeding from an officer of the standing of a Collector ought to possess. It is bringing the administration of justice to contempt, judged by commonsense standards, to misuse a provision of law meant for quite other purposes, to threaten the conductors of a peaceful meeting with penalties if they disobeyed his orders issued under the pretence of an authority for which there is absolutely no foundation. We do hope that the matter will not be left here."

Hindu, Madras, Oct. 31st, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 31st, 1916.

New India, of the 31st October, observes:—"It is amusing to read in the Madras Mail in a paragraph referring to the Ahmedabad incident:

> It can hardly be to the benefit of a conference to risk erroneous reporting through the Criminal Investigation Department reporters being badly situated.

"The prejudiced and often ignorant reporting of Criminal Investigation Department men is notorious, as is the inaccuracy of translations made in the Criminal Investigation Department offices. . . . . Indian speakers would be in no danger if the reports were accurate, but all fear the distortions created by prejudice and bias. When Mrs. Annie Besant was lecturing at Dacca, the Criminal Investigation Department men were given seats on the platform, yet either they or the Government Censor cut out all she said against the use of violence in politics. On the whole, it is unimportant whether they hear correctly or not, since the difficulty is with what they write, not with what they hear."

3. New India, of the 31st October, has the following:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 31st, 1916.

'Fear of the C.I.D.

The Bengal Double Company.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Rai Srinath Rai Bahadur has written to the Amrita Bazaar Patrika giving a very strange explanation for the failure of the authorities to get as many men as they expected for the Bengal Double Company. He says that wherever he went, people 'freely gave expression to the belief that active sympathy with, or enlistment in, the Bengal Double Company would bring down upon them the thunderbolt of the Criminal Investigation Department.' The honourable gentleman does not belong to the class of 'irresponsible agitators,' and his statement throws much light on the opinion of the people of Bengal on the aims and objects of the Criminal Investigation Department."

(b) Courts.

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 28th October, remarks:—"So Mrs. Besant has decided to take her case up to the highest judicial tribunal in the empire. The stand she makes for the liberty of the native Indian press and of the subject is truly magnificent, for which she deserves the thanks and gratitude of the Indian people. We earnestly hope that she will succeed in winning back for the Indian press that liberty which it once enjoyed. WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 28th, 1916.

New India security case.

The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 1st November, has the following:—"There is no need here to go into the details of the judgment in the New India security case. If anything, their Lordships conceded whatever was possible in Mrs. Besant's favour, but still they felt obliged to say that some of the articles complained of went beyond the limits of fair criticism. That is putting it at the mildest, and no self-respecting journalist can afford to be told that his criticisms of men and measures go beyond fair limits. A journalist who is alive to the sacredness of his calling, and is really anxious to promote the commonweal will need no reminder of what the law is in respect of his rights and privileges. . . . . Some of the points urged on behalf Mrs. Besant were in the last degree disingenuous. One contention on behalf of Mrs. Besant was that the Magistrate having once dispensed with security had no power to demand it, cancelling his original order. Legal quibbling apart, the provision in the Act is quite clear. It allows the Magistrate discretion to dispense with security, and at the same time confers on him power to vary or cancel his order. If Mrs. Besant's contention were right, it would be a distinct disservice to the press for whose freedom she is so aggressively fighting. No Magistrate would then care to use his discretion in favour of any printer or proprietor of a newspaper, and he will demand security of all as a matter of course. . . . . Another was in effect that the Government established by law here was His Majesty the King-Emperor and did not apply to those who were carrying on the administration on his behalf. But we cannot understand how disaffection to the ruling class as a body here was compatible with loyalty to the British Throne. Loyalty to the King-Emperor must mean an active and willing support given to His Majesty's representatives in India in administering the affairs of the country. . . . . It is one thing to fight for the legitimate freedom of the press, but quite another to say that the press should be under no kind of restraint and everybody must have a carte blanche to print and publish whatever he is pleased to. Unbridled license and freedom are two very different things and a right apprehension of the difference is needed for a correct perspective of the place of the press in the public polity of a country. It is the confounding of the two that is responsible for so much of wild outpourings both in the press and on the platform." WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Nov. 1st, 1916.

5. New India, of the 30th October, observes:—"The anger of the Madras Mail against the two Indian Judges who sat in the New India petition does not abate. Were it not for its fury, we should not have known how hardly their judgment hit our antagonists, for, after all, NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct 30th, 1916.

The Madras Mail and the New India security case.

though they did Mrs. Annie Besant the obvious justice of admitting her absolute loyalty to the Crown and her persistently law-abiding agitation, their decision was that she came within the all-embracing clutches of the Press Act. . . . . The point of the 'Indian' is that, like every decent Indian, they regard the Press Act as objectionable, and see that which is 'sedition' in the eyes of the Anglo-Indian as 'patriotism'. There lies the radical difference, and the difference of attitude and opinion between the Indian Judges and their colleague is the difference that divides Indians and Anglo-Indians. It must be so in all political cases where a nation is ruled by foreigners who are not responsible to it. There is no getting away from this hard fact. Garibaldi was a 'rebel' in the eyes of the rulers of the Two Sicilies; he was a 'Saviour' in the eyes of the people.

"As resentment grows against the use of the Press Act to stop political discussion, the distinction of view between the races will become more and more marked. The Indian Judges showed their profound disapproval of the law that they were obliged to administer. Presently, no Indian Judge will consent to sit in a press case, and the trials under the Press Act will be left to Anglo-Indian Judges. It will be hard on the Indian press, but well for India. . . . . When the Press Act is only administered by Anglo-Indian Judges, and Indian papers patiently suffer the spoiling of their goods, it will quickly become too unpopular to be used. Where the infliction of legal penalties carries with it no disgrace, but exalts the sufferer in the eyes of the nation, no modern civilised Government can long maintain the law which brings about such results. . . . . The struggle for Indian liberty may—nay, it must—demand its martyrs, but its triumph is sure. And it is the feeling that the blow struck at New India conduces to the ultimate freedom of the Indian press, that arouses the Madras Mail to such malignity. . . . . The indecency of writing as it does, and supplying arguments on one side of a case, of which notice has already gone to the Government, is patent. But the Madras Mail is a licensed offender, as its grossest attempts to stir up hatred and contempt against Indians are allowed to pass unchallenged.

"If New India treated the judgment of the Hon'ble Justice Sir William Ayling with the open anger and veiled contempt with which the Madras Mail treats those of the then Acting Chief Justice and the Hon'ble Justice Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, it would certainly have its second security forfeited for bringing into contempt the administration of justice. But we have not the slightest inclination to do so, for the judgment was exactly what we expected, and we do not feel the least annoyance or resentment. Cannot the Madras Mail accept the judgments of the Indian Judges with similar equanimity and good temper? It might at least affect those virtues, if it has them not."

New India, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Madras University.

6. New India, of the 28th October, writes:—"Two incidents that took place at yesterday's meeting of the Senate deserve particular notice, since they go to confirm the Indian view of the capacity and nature of the people who now control the University. Mr. Mark Hunter delivered a very militant speech, which no unbiassed person would expect from one who knew the dignity of a Syndic and a Senator. . . . And what was Mr. Hunter's position when he made that speech? He was one of the party of experts who had acted in a most extraordinary fashion, and in the result, entangled the University in an unbecoming law suit, for which it had to lose heavily. The Syndicate lost its case in every one of its contentions; and it had rushed to Court with so weak a case without even taking legal opinion. The person who was a party to all those mistakes and blunders says he is impenitent, and abuses those who saw that justice was done. And to make matters worse, no member of the Syndicate got up to disown the sentiments expressed by their excited colleague. We merely ask our readers to think whether such a Syndicate should be permitted to guide the University."

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 28th October, says:—"The discussion on Dr. Nayar's resolution in the Senate last evening on the subject of the costs incurred in consequence of the recent Mandamus application in the High Court, was of considerable interest. . . . . In any view of the matter, the Syndicate had no arguable position after the decision of the High Court against them. It is, therefore, very remarkable that Professor Mark Hunter launched out in his speech yesterday into a bitter invective against the two Fellows who entered the protest and enforced their right by recourse to the High Court. They did a public service by maintaining their ground, and it is a sorry sight for a prominent member of the Syndicate to lose temper and show lack of sense of propriety over the successful vindication of their rights in a court of law."

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 28th October, observes:—"The report of the meeting of the Senators of the Madras University which we publish elsewhere will be read with even greater interest than a comic opera written for the benefit of the War Fund. Mr. Hunter and Dr. Nayar were the heroes of the day, and we have our own doubts whether it would not have been better for the 'interests of University' for which the Vice-Chancellor evinced such concern in reply to one of the interpellations, if the proceedings had been held in camera. When angry Senators behave like unruly schoolboys, crying out that one is ashamed of the other, we confess a very bad precedent is set before the younger generation that are growing up in our schools. Mr. Hunter rushes on the stage blushing for shame for Mr. G. A. Natesan and Mr. K. B. Ramanathan, for they dragged the University to the Court and the curtain rings down to a sweet soliloquy from Mr. Hunter on academic spirit, with Dr. Nayar bending over him with killing scorn. . . . . This picture from the conclaves of our worthy Senators will exert a most demoralising effect upon our young men. We would suggest that next time Mr. Hunter appears on the stage with fierce ejaculations, the proceedings must be closed to the press; unless the University has great faith in the gentlemanliness of our youths. We may even suggest to the Chancellor of the University if he could not throw open the next and successive meetings of the Senate to the public on payment of a fee, which will go to swell the War Fund, taking care to put up well-known Senators on the stage. It is high time that a tone of dignity were infused into the proceedings of the Madras University."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

7. The Indian Patriot, of the 30th October, states:—"The Missionary gentleman who was displaying what no doubt he thought his clever ridicule of Hindu religion, little imagined that his appointment to the University lectureship would be imperilled by his manifestations of contempt for the Hindu religion. When his name was proposed for the lectureship, Indian members frankly opposed it. They did not want such a man to lecture to Indian youths, and we hope that next time the matter comes up for consideration, this same attitude will be maintained, in spite of any explanation or even apology by the Missionary. These men deserve to be taught the lesson that it is sometimes dangerous to abuse Indians or Hinduism. . . . . Frankly, we have no faith in these University lectures, as they are delivered by very ordinary people who have nothing original, nothing of research to boast. Of course, the lectures help the University to spend some money and some people to earn it. Others have had it, and Mr. Moulton could have had it too but for his ebullitions on Hinduism."

Dr. J. H. Moulton and the Madras University.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 30th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 30th October, says:—"Mr. L. C. Hodgson complained at the Senate meeting that Dr. Moulton was condemned unheard. He should be asked 'for an explanation, a privilege which, all over the world, was accorded even to the meanest and humblest peon'. Mr. Hodgson is evidently ignorant of the way in which the Press Act is worked. It is, however, difficult to see what there was for Dr. Moulton to 'explain'. He had called the Motherside, the Power-side, of God a 'she-devil'. So revolting a blasphemy cannot be 'explained'. A Roman Catholic will understand Hindu feeling, if he imagines a Hindu—no Hindu could so trample on religious feeling—applying the above term to his ideal of the divine motherhood. Would he allow a man who committed such an outrage to lecture to his sons? It is worth noting that the Rev. Mr. Pittendrigh was prepared to vote for Dr. Moulton."

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

An official Educational Conference.

8. The Hindu, of the 3rd November, remarks:—"It is stated that proposals are under consideration to hold a Conference of the Directors of Public Instruction at Delhi towards the end of January next, to discuss educational developments in India. The results of similar deliberations held during the last decade and a half have not been quite happy to the cause of Indian education, and the announcement just made cannot but rouse misgiving in the public mind as to the conclusions of the forthcoming Conference, having regard to the temper of the Government of India of the present day as judged by the Patna University Bill. . . . . The purpose for which the forthcoming conference is to meet is to consider 'education developments in India.' . . . . We are under no illusions as to the kind of work that such a conference will do. Officials will be officials, when they are in their isolated splendour and when they think and act in concert. Rather would their prejudices and ill-digested opinions harden and become adamantine when similar views of their brethren are made known in the safe seclusion secured at Delhi. The Indian public have had bitter experience of such official gatherings meeting in secret conclave and their suspicions cannot be said to be without foundation in fact. It is likely that the Directors' Conference may result in a Commission, being appointed to consider all aspects of educational development in India. Such a consummation is devoutly to be wished, provided that the persons selected for the Commission are of the right sort. There is very important and responsible work for such a Commission. But India has had very unfortunate experience of Commissions and she will rather go without any Commissions at all than be burdened with such as—like the Public Services Commission—prove to be costly luxuries."

(e) Local and Municipal.

West Coast Bulletin, Muttancherri, Cochin State, Oct. 20th, 1916.

The Cochin municipality.

9. In a leader on this subject, the West Coast Bulletin, for the week ending 20th October, states:—"While dealing with the affairs of the Town Councils in Cochin State, we said what a pleasure it was to us to touch upon problems of local self-government. In our treatment of the subject then, we ignored the British Cochin Municipality, simply because it lies outside our province; and our neglect of the municipality is also due to the fact that there are champions in the press there who in season and out of season show an extraordinary vigilance and diligence in tom-toming the success and glory of the civic administration. But now the cat is out of the bag, and the reality of the situation is depicted to the public gaze in all its glaring nakedness by the recent Government order on the Administration Report of the British Cochin Municipality for the year 1915-16. From top to bottom, the report and the Government order thereon supply every lover of local self-government with a sort of pathetic reading, and the irresistible conclusion that spontaneously arises is that there is something rotten in the State of Denmark. . . . . The stagnation and lack of interest in municipal affairs having been clearly established, it were vain to seek for any saving features in our neighbouring civic board, in spite of the idly busy activity of one of our local English contemporaries in pitchforking the Chairman and his ways to prominent public attention. . . . . When we turn to the question of medical relief, we are very much struck by the generosity of the Government in sanctioning a sum of Rs. 74,000 for the new municipal hospital. But the good intentions of the Government are seen to be vitiated by the local administration, for there was a decline in the number of out-patients in cases of infantile vaccination, and in midwifery cases for which the administration report has not furnished any explanation whatever. . . . . In the matter of utilising the special grants, so affectionately sanctioned by the Government, the Municipal Council has shown an utter negligence which merits the severest impeachment; yet the Government are still very liberal, for they indulge in the hope that steps will soon be taken to utilize the unspent balance as rapidly as circumstances allow. Such is the picture of the neighbouring civic board that is presented to our view by the recent Government order. All the sins of omission and commission singled out by the Government in their order were perpetrated when Mr. Shirgaokar himself was Chairman, and therefore it is that we fail to see the reason and justice that actuated the Government in consenting themselves to be a party to the re-nomination of the same gentleman to the Council chair. In the face of all the flagrant shortcomings noticed above, the better plan for British Cochin would be to go in for the services of a paid Chairman with engineering qualifications who will be able to look after the work with as much attention as is deserved by the municipality. British Cochin is an important town in the Madras Presidency, and we are indeed very much ashamed to see the sorry figure cut by the Municipal Council in comparison with the other municipalities."

The Palghat municipality.

10. The West Coast Reformer, of the 29th October, writes:—"When forwarding the administration report of the Palghat Municipality for the last financial year, the Divisional Officer Mr. Macqueen made a very long endorsement with criticisms on every branch of the municipal administration, specially relating to the period during which he was ex officio chairman. On account of the numerous defects which he pointed out, he concluded that a whole-time paid chairman or a secretary with full delegated powers was necessary to secure efficiency. . . . . 'The post of manager,' says Mr. Macqueen, 'represents a compromise which, I submit, has not worked well in practice. His exact functions are not well defined nor does he wield those powers which in the case of a secretary are effective in keeping control on the executive.' The secretary would, however, enjoy larger freedom from the very necessary control of the council and would perhaps also require higher salary. Those two conditions will not be accepted by the rate-payers who are alreadv complaining against the excessive independence and salary of the manager; and it will be no creditable record of local self-government to override the wishes of the ratepayers."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Oct. 29th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 31st October, says:—"The administration report of the Palghat Municipal Council for the last official year is certainly a very interesting study, especially to those who have watched the various phases of local self-government in that town which was responsible, it must be remembered, for the notorious 'Palghat Muddle.' . . . . We regret, however, very much to have to observe that instead of showing peaceful development, civic government is advancing—in a backward direction or like Dobbin's tale. . . . . Sanitation, scavenging, conservancy, roads and markets have all shown a marked deterioration for which there can absolutely be no justification whatever. The roads are terribly bad, in spite of the pretty large sum spent upon them, while 'there is scarcely a road or street in Palghat which is not defiled in the early hours of the morning or after sunset;' the public latrines are an eye-sore, defective in construction they are over-grown with rank vegetation and the surroundings defiled. The totties have constituted unto themselves a republic, proof against executive control and indifferent to their work. Town refuse is disposed of in a way dangerous to public health. . . . . The only redeeming feature is the eminently satisfactory working of the medical institutions under the capable supervision of Rao Bahadur Krishnan whose name continues to attract patients from far and wide. On the whole, the reputation of the civic politicians of Palghat now hangs in the balance, and if they do not give up factious spirit and co-operate whole-heartedly with the Chairman we tremble for the feature of municipal government in that town."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 31st 1916.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

A Bellary grievance.

11. The Indian Patriot, of the 1st November, observes:—"The Hindus of Bellary, especially the vegetarians, have been recently engaged in controversies, in spite of the war and the anxiety of every one of us that, as far as possible, we should not breathe the air of controversy. A Muhammadan gentleman took it into his head to build a market and ask for a license to sell meat in the market. The market is surrounded by Hindus, especially Linoayets. The Hindus were very strongly opposed to the idea of meat being sold there, and their strong feeling found expression in public meetings, protests and representations to the Collector. The Collector convened a conference of leading citizens to consider the question of the meat market in the midst of vegetarians, and the Collector called upon the protestants to deposit Rs. 20,000 in order to purchase the building at a price to be settled by arbitration. That was a fair proposal. . . . . Four wealthy Hindus came forward to stand security, and they executed an agreement to the effect. All at once, however, the Collector now turns round and says that he meant something else. The sacrifice that the Hindu citizens were willing to make was a testimony of their strong wish against the location of the meat market in their midst. . . . . The attitude of the Collector of Bellary has given rise to serious misgivings among the community. They are surprised that a Collector can say one thing today and quite another thing tomorrow. 'We cannot compel a citizen to sell his site,' says the Collector. Then why did he make an offer of sale without consulting the citizen? It was thought that he had consulted the Moslem owner of the market regarding its sale. The action of the authorities has, if anything, made the situation worse than it was when they proposed to interfere with, we have no doubt, the very best intentions."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

The Board of Revenue.

12. The Hindu, of the 2nd November, remarks:—"We understand that the scheme for the transfer of the Co-operative, Agricultural and Veterinary Departments from the Madras Board of Revenue to the Government has been put into force from yesterday. Judging from the record of the Board in the past, we cannot say that the change now effected will not be to the advantage of the public, for, in many matters the intervention of the Board had distinctly tended to the most unsatisfactory solution of questions coming before that body. If the present step is the first towards the ultimate abolition of that reactionary body of Civilian officers, the public will have everything to gain."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 26th, 1916.

The District Superintendent of Police, South Malabar.

13. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 26th October:—"It was a fine compliment Lord Pentland paid Mr. Hitchcock the other day in decorating him with the King's Police medal. A 'strong' police officer, he has proved himself the Tartar, or rather Eblis, as the Moplah would say, of Ernad the fanatic zone—and the Terror of the Moplah fanatic whose hal evaporates the moment he hears the name of Hitchcock Sahib. He has also proved that the policy of administering alternate doses of cane and jam to the Moplah fanatic which proved so mischievous in the past, is radically wrong and that the fanatic distemper can only be cured by strong doses of cane and castor oil."

WESTERN STAR, Trivandrum, Oct. 26th, 1916.

The Madras Executive Council.

14. The Western Star, of the 26th October, writes:—"The term of office of Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar as the Indian Member of the Madras Executive Council is fast drawing to its close, and a most animated and interesting discussion is going on as regards a suitable successor to this very onerous and, at the same time, greatly coveted appointment. . . . . The present discussion as regards a really suitable successor resolves itself largely into controversy as to whether the appointment should next go to an official or to a non-official or, in the alternative, to some distinguished retired official or to some one who, having rendered meritorious public service, has accepted some high Government appointment, but has not been in it long enough to have become officialised or narrow-minded, as one correspondent rather unkindly puts it. According to one school of opinionists, a non-official would be no better than an amateur, while according to another school, if non-officials could straightway be sent out to this country as Viceroys and Governors and could also be straightway appointed as Cabinet Ministers in England, there is no reason whatever why the selection of a non-official for an Executive Council in this country should be considered unwise or undesirable. . . . . For our own part, we must confess that we are strongly inclined to the view that, although, in course of time, as the capacity of the people for really efficient self-government enlarges, it will become not only desirable, but a distinct measure of justice and expediency, to recruit the Executive Councils more and more from the ranks of public men, who have justified the esteem and confidence of both State and people. The time has hardly yet arrived when insistence should be laid upon the proposition that effective popular representation and continuity of progressive administration along the most desiable lines of advance is best to be secured and insured by rigidly reserving the Indian Memberships in our Executive Councils for men with public experience and training but without any official experience or training, of either the executive or administrative type. . . . . Beyond this, it is our sincere and deliberate opinion that, to the coming vacancy in the Madras Council, the appointment of a trained and exceptionally competent official is called for by reason of a combination of existing and impending circumstances. . . . . In this matter also, if we were to express an opinion, we would without hesitation say that, in the ranks of really eligible Indian officials, it is very doubtful if any could be found with better or more varied claims and qualifications than Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achari, M.A., C.I.E., who is at present, as is known, acquitting himself with great credit in an important and arduous position in the Madras Secretariat. Mr. Rajagopala Achari possesses merits and qualifications which fit him singularly for the Indian seat in the Executive Council. . . . . His achievements as the Diwan of two Native States and as Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies furnish the amplest proof that he cannot for a moment be relegated to the category of narrow-minded officials, who, according to one school of opinion, ought to be scartched for the Executive Council. His tendencies are liberal, he has always shown himself to be in favour of the emancipation of the people and of their being given larger opportunities of self-development, and in both Cochin and Travancore he proved himself a courageous progressist, whose imaginative faculties are those of the far-seeing statesman and not those of the mere builder of castles in the air. . . . . In a word there is no reason for supposing that his failure to be selected on any previous occasion was due to aught else than ill-luck on his part, since then he has accumulated further valuable experience, and all circumstances considered, his selection as the successor to Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar would, in our opinion, be in substantial furtherance of the true interests of the Presidency and in keeping with the principle that these new appointments should be conferred on the very best men available and not on the basis of concessions to popular sentiment and susceptibilities."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 28th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 28th October, says:—"We have information from a source whose reliability and veracity we have no reason to doubt that the choice of a successor to Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar as Indian member of the Executive Council lies between Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achari and Raja Manavedan Raja; and it is almost certain that either of them will be selected and an announcement made shortly. From a purely Indian point of view, neither of these gentlemen will be acceptable, for one of them is an official in harness and the other a retired official, both trained to move along official grooves and to look at things from the official's standpoint. . . . . Whatever the merits of these two gentlemen they cannot, by training, by temperament and by association, lay claim to represent the educated classes, and the appointment of either of them will not be acceptable to that articulate and real India whose vitality, importance and right to be heard even its enemies have conceded. . . . . This presidency is not barren of non-officials whose appointment will be hailed with delight. Gooty Kesava Pillai, T. M. Nayar, R. Ramachandra Rao, who though an official is neither a crank nor is possessed of bureaucratic peculiarities and prejudices, and Salem Vijiaraghava Achari bear names to be conjured with, honoured and respected by friends and foes alike. But, will these names suggest themselves to the powers that be? We think not, for reasons we need not mention here. It is, however, to be hoped that the choice that will ultimately be made will not create astonishment and amusement in the country."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Oct. 31st, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 31st October, remarks:—"Lawyer, statesman (but not fiddler and buffoon) educationist, railway and malaria expert, and what not, the Walluvanad Roosevelt, we see, is also the public contradictor. He contradicts the rumour that Raja Manavedan Raja is in the running for the Executive Councillorship. Contradiction or no contradiction, we stick to our statement and repeat again that the Raja has a chance, though he may not himself know it. We also know that his candidature is powerfully supported."

United India and Native States, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

United India and Native States, for the week ending 2nd November, observes:—"Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar, Member of the Madras Executive Council, is due to retire in February next when his five-years term of office will expire, and there is consequently much speculation as to his successor. A heated controversy has been carried on in the Madras press as to the claims of officials and non-officials and the local Anglo-Indian champion of officialdom has pleaded for the appointment of an official. With this contention educated Indians will hardly agree unless it be that an official possessing the outstanding qualifications of Sir Sankaran Nayar or Justice Abdur Rahim can be appointed. If, however, an official of the type of either of the two gentlemen is not forthcoming we hope that the choice of Government will fall on a non-official. . . . . If Indians are to be represented on the Council by an unsympathetic officer they can just as well be represented by a European officer, for we hold that as between an Indian officer and a European officer the latter is infinitely better."

New India, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Indian Press Act.

15. New India, of the 28th October, states:—"There seems to be a wish on the part of the Local Governments to carry on a crusade against the Indian press. Yesterday it was the Express of Bankipur; to-day the Pratap, a Hindi weekly journal of Cawnpur, is menaced. Elsewhere will be found a statement relating to the proceedings afoot, and the proscription of a Hindi drama on the condition of indentured labourers in Fiji. It is idle to attempt to hide this plague-spot by confiscating statements which reveal its hideousness; the relative number of the sexes among the emigrants, and the number of suicides in Fiji speak with a voice that cannot be silenced."

New India, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

Missionaries and India.

16. In commenting on an article in the Christian Commonwealth under the heading "Ignorance of Empire," New India, of the 28th October, says:—"Missionaries may tell any lies about India and reap thereby a rich harvest, but if an Indian writer here alludes ever so briefly to the darker sides of English life in England, an English Judge here will censure him, and even an Indian Judge will find it 'bad taste' to mention them. Why may not Indians see Englishmen as they are, if Indians may be seen by Englishmen as they are not? . . . . Friends of humanity must understand that the only way of uniting the empire is by freedom. India is chafing against her bonds, and those bonds must be loosed. England must be true to herself, if she would keep her empire together. Now is the hour of her trial; now is God weighing her in His balances, and the final judgment is in His Hands."

17. The West Coast Spectator, of the 28th October, writes :—"There is consternation in Bengal, because it is rumoured that Sir Robert Chalmers is to succeed Lord Carmichael—and no wonder Sir Robert was a miserable failure in Ceylon. His handling of the situation created by the recent riots, and his courts-martial, the results of an exaggerated view of the situation, at once proclaimed him as one utterly unfit to rule over an eastern colony or dependency.

The Governorship of Bengal.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 28th, 1916.

"A veritable Jingo whose political faith is summed up in the doctrine, viz., martial law and no d—d nonsense, he is not the man to administer Bengal, just at present. He seems to take after Sir Bampfylde Fuller, a follower of the doctrine we have just mentioned whose repression was so intolerable that it only aggravated matters and led even Lord Minto into effecting his resignation. Let us hope that the Secretary of State will not make the colossal blunder of sending an undesirable man to rule over the Bengalees."

The Indian Patriot, of the 30th October, observes :—"The rumour about the prospective appointment of Sir Robert Chalmers as the Governor of Bengal has led to an interesting, if horrid, exposure by Mr. Eardley Norton, calculated to make Bengal despondent of its fate. There is absolutely no chance of Bengal sharing the fate of Ceylon. There are constitutional safeguards against the drama of Ceylon being repeated in Bengal; there is a powerful public opinion which can prevent such a catastrophe. Lord Curzon alone tried to disregard public opinion in Bengal; but in the end it triumphed over the ex-Viceroy. With this example before him, Sir Robert Chalmers would not try the experiment, which he carried out in Ceylon, even were he allowed to do so. . . . . How the name of Sir Michael O'Dwyer first and then of Sir Robert Chalmers came to be mentioned in connection with the office we do not know. There is a singular inappropriateness in regard to both. There is no reason why a member of the Civil Service should be chosen for Bengal so early in the history of the new Governorship. There is much less reason why the man who was recalled from Ceylon where he had, to say the least, failed to satisfy public opinion, should be asked to go to Bengal where the qualification most needed in the Governor is the capacity to harmonise administrative methods with public opinion."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 30th, 1916.

18. The West Coast Spectator, of the 28th October, has the following :—"Mr. R. H. Ellis, President of the Tellicherry Taluk Board, goes on long leave. The resolution of regret passed at the last meeting of the Board on the motion of Mr. Bavotty seconded by Mr. Vasudevan Nambudiripad does not, we know, fall under the category of conventional lies of our civilization. From all accounts it is clear that Mr. Ellis has been an ideal President, who does not thrust his views on the Board expecting it to accept them. He has always sought the guidance and help of his colleagues."

Mr. R. H. Ellis, I.C.S.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 28th, 1916.

19. The Indian Patriot, of the 30th October, writes :—"The evidence of a European merchant, which we publish elsewhere, before the Indian Industrial Commission, might perhaps be taken as the standard which that class might be expected to keep up. The Hon'ble Mr. James Currie is as anxious as any Indian patriot to see the trade and manufacture of India develop. But his suggestions are made more with an eye to personal profits than national advancement. . . . . We are afraid that people who think in this vein are not aware of the popular movement for industries. We are anxious to capture the world market and be as enterprising as any people upon earth, but our first concern is to elevate the people from poverty. . . . . We want Government initiative and Government subsidy. We want the Government to stand behind the Indian citizen and teach him how to be a successful merchant, a successful mill-owner, a skilled labourer. All this, of course, only in the beginning. When the path to industries is laid down as broad as the path to the lawyers' profession, the Government may retire and be prepared to do for the people even less than European traders suggest."

The Indian Industrial Commission.

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Oct. 30th, 1916.

HINDU, Madras, Oct. 31st, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 31st October, says:—The examination of the first two witnesses by the Royal Commission on Indian Industries presents certain unsatisfactory features. In the first place, we note that the rules for the selection of witnesses has not been made with due discrimination. According to the instructions issued by the Commission in the matter to public bodies in this Presidency, actual personal experience of some industry is a sine qua non for a person to be selected as a witness. We protested against the insistence of this qualification at the time when it was announced and pressed for a departure so that a publicist who, though without personal experience, had yet made a special study of an industry, might have the opportunity of giving the Commission the benefit of his enquiries. We find the departure has now been made, but, unfortunately, in the wrong direction, with the result that the Commission got for their second witness a merchant whose experience of industries was confined to the importation of Manchester goods and whose knowledge of Indian conditions is so profund that he thinks the prosperity of this country depends entirely on agriculture and minerals and that given good crops, every one is happy and prosperous . . . . . We would earnestly impress upon the minds of Anglo-Indian witnesses as well as on the Commission the importance of finding out the possibilities for development irrespective of the consequences that such development might be supposed to entail on the home or colonial industries. . . . . So far as the evidence tendered is concerned, our view that avoidable and artificial circumstances have strangled more than one industry is confirmed. . . . . We have to point out the necessity for a more searching cross-examination of witnesses. It is highly important that sufficient evidence as to such points as were raised above and others of a similar nature should be collected with a view to finding out the truth in the matter. We have not before us a full report of the proceedings of the Commission to which we refer and are not, therefore, in a position to criticise them. We hope, however, that members of the Commission will not fail to arrive, by persistent and well-framed questions, at the actual state of affairs and suggest practical remedies therefor."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 31st, 1916.

India and the empire.

20. In the fifth of a series of articles reviewing the book the problem of the Commonwealth, by L. Curtis, New India, of the 31st October, remarks:—"What is to be the status of India in the reconstructed empire? Let Britain and the Dominions settle things as they may, the Sphinx of India looms up before them, and they must answer its question or perish. Foreign policy and military and naval affairs cannot be carried on, says Mr. Curtis, by a Cabinet which does not control India, Egypt, and some other areas. Then these must come under Imperial control. But—and here is the crux—in the British Commonwealth 'the function of Government is reserved to the European minority, for the unanswerable reason that for the present this portion of its citizens is alone capable of the task'! On this huge assumption his remaining fabric is built up. Only Europeans can govern. Accept that, and all the rest is smooth.

"Now the United Kingdom has a population of 45,365,599, the Dominions of 14,000,938 and India of 199,776 white people. Fifty-nine and a half millions, with those scattered over the surface of the earth, are to govern over 365 millions of coloured races. That is the monstrous claim put forward. No distinctions are made except between 'white' and 'coloured'. A drunken ignorant wife-beating ruffian from a London slum is fit not only to share in the Government of his own country, but in that of others; an intellectual clean-living Brahmana is not fit to govern his own country, but must submit to be ruled by the ruffian aforesaid. Beauty is said to be but skin-deep, but white skin evidently is deep enough to give the right to dominate the world. The Manu was coloured; Ashoka was coloured; the Lord Buddha was coloured; the Prophet of Islam was coloured. What then? The pallor of the white is alone acceptable, and the sun-kissed red-gold tint must humbly stand aside. 'The function of Government is reserved to the European minority.' Reserved—by whom? . . . . We must not, however, forget that, despite its arrogance and absurdity, this new party of the rule of the five white nations and the subjection of the coloured races is a very dangerous one, and threatens the very life of the empire. More than one leading Indian has declared that India will never submit to be ruled by Colonials. This new-fangled, composite, five-fold yoke would be intolerable, and India will never bend her neck to it. . . . . Meanwhile Mr. Curits would do well to cultivate the quality of imagination, and to realise, if he can, that the coloured man is a man, with a man's feelings, a man's pride, a man's love for his native soil, and that even a coloured man cannot see without bitter shame and anger that a foreigner has greater privileges than he himself possesses in the land which gave him birth."

The Government of Bombay and Mrs. Besant.

21. New India, of the 31st October, observes:—"We do not think that Mr. H. A. Wadia does wisely in exposing the weakness of the once famous Bombay Presidency Association. He states that the association objected to 'any prominent allusion to Mrs. Besant' in formulating a resolution against the Defence Act. He forgets that Mr. Gandhi, the mover of the resolution, the Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Sastri, the seconder, and the 1,300 delegates at the conference, unanimously passed, not the Bombay Presidency resolution, omitting Mrs. Besant's name, but a resolution including it. We presume these 1,300 delegates represented Bombay opinion better than the few of the Presidency Association who have always shown, for some unintelligible reason, such bitter hostility to Mrs. Besant."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 31st, 1916.

The emigration enquiry.

22. The West Coast Spectator, of the 31st October, states:—"We expressed the hope the other day that the selection of an Indian to accompany Mr. Todhunter in his emigration enquiry will not take after the Government's nomination of an Indian to the Vice-Chancellorship of the University. The Government have now selected the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar Sahib and we are disappointed. This gentleman is a shipper of cattle to Ceylon, and if we are correctly informed is connected with the Ceylon Labour Commission which recruits labour in South India. We do not mean any disparagement to Mr. Marakkayar, but we cannot help remarking that the disappointment is great and that Mr. Kesava Pillai, who is an expert in the emigration question, ought to have been selected. Some of Lord Pentland's recent acts have created the profoundest regret in the Presidency, it must be mentioned."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Oct. 31st, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Indian Patriot, of the 2nd November, says:—"The Madras Mail, we are afraid, was not well informed when it wrote yesterday that the Indian Member, who is to proceed to Ceylon and the Federated Malay States, has not been nominated. The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Ahmed Thambi Marakkayar, whose direct knowledge of cooly conditions both in Ceylon and the Federated Malay States, is unrivalled, and Mr. Marjoribanks will form the deputation. His connection with the British Indian Steam Navigation Company, which is a European firm and the carriers of the coolies to Ceylon or the Federated Malay States, must, if anything, be an advantage . . . . A thoroughly independant man, a resolute champion of the backward classes, and above all, absolutely simple and homely the Khan Bahadur's selection will be received with hope. He can mingle with the coolies, and enter into the spirit of their conversation very accurately. He is too shrewd a businessman to be misled by any put-up witnesses of the planters. . . . . The Indian cooly in these places is believed to be a wretch, cursing the hour he left India, suffering untold miseries at the hands of the planters, and, as statistics have shown, ready to commit suicide. The stories that come from the plantations are sometimes horrible reading. The Hon'ble Mr. Marakkayar has an opportunity to closely observe the condition of our coolies and, by forming his own independent opinion, rescue his countrymen from the sad situation which, we all believe, they are in. Such opportunities seldom come to an Indian, and we have no doubt the Khan Bahadur will make the best of his opportunity in the interest of his very poor and illiterate countrymen who brave the known and unknown terrors of the plantations."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

23. The following appears in New India of the 1st November :—

The Governments of the Central Provinces and Berar and Mrs. Besant.

"A contrast.

"Today is the anniversary of the Proclamation of Queen Victoria, of Blessed Memory; today I receive from a gentleman whose caligraphy makes it impossible to find out who he is, but who purports to be the Chief Secretary of the 'Local Government of the Central Provinces' and of the 'Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces' forbidding me to 'enter, reside or remain in the Central Provinces' and 'in Berar' the said Local Government and Commissioner having 'reasonable grounds'—presumably what they call reasonable—for believing that I have 'acted or am about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety.' I wish these sapient gentlemen of Bombay, Central Provinces and Berar would so far descend from their Olympian heights as to condescend to inform me about the 'reasonable grounds.' I feel fairly sure that if they had any they would promptly state them, in order to escape the amused and amazed contemplation of a sceptical world.

"It is a pity that the authorities had not the grace to issue their order earlier, so as to prevent the widespread disappointment and anger that this belated announcement will cause. However, that is their affair rather than mine, as orders of this kind only hasten the happy day when India shall enjoy Home Rule. These orders will preach it far more eloquently than my lectures would do, and to a larger audience.

"As it is only dull people who repeat themselves, I will not even pretend to anger this time.

"ANNIE BESANT,
"President of the Theosophical Society.

"I was going to Amraoti to preside over a Theosophical Conference, not a political one, and was only going to one town, so two orders seem to be surplusage."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 1st November, says :—"It is with considerable surprise that we learn that the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces and Berar has promulgated an order, presumably under rule 3 of the Rules framed under the Defence of India Act of 1915, prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering that province. We must deprecate, in the strongest manner, this ill-judged action taken by Sir Benjamin Robertson, who is reputed to be an able and just administrator. We regret that he should have given way to panic and sought to put the Act into force against Mrs. Besant whose loyalty to the Crown is undoubted. The Bombay Government's unjustifiable step in prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering that province has aroused the keenest resentment throughout India and has incidentally drawn attention to the grave danger to the liberty of the subject involved in the Defence of India Act and its application. The Central Provinces Government's prohibitory order is all the more inexplicable because Mrs. Besant had arranged to go to Amroati in connection with a non-political purpose—to preside over a Theosophical Conference. The principal object of the Defence of India Act was that it may be put in force when military reasons require it. But Mrs. Besant's case shows that the Provincial Governments do not feel that their hands are tied in any such manner. The reasons for the surprising order are not stated, and the public cannot, therefore, entertain any but the gravest apprehensions regarding the use which the Act of 1915 is likely to be put to by the Executive."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

24. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 1st November, says :—

The powers of the Financial Committee.

"Under the reform scheme, which has been in force for over six years, the privileges accorded to non-official Members of the Legislative Councils have been availed of to the fullest extent and striking testimony has been paid to their enthusiasm, knowledge, moderation and high sense of duty. It is remarkable, however, that while every endeavour has been made by the representatives of the people to render the reforms successful, the various administrations in India have not exhibited a corresponding earnestness to realise, by means of the new facilities, the objects underlying the scheme. Restricted as the powers of the Councils are, the Executive Governments have sought to still further narrow them down in practice and interpret the rules in such an illiberal manner as to reduce the power of doing good on the part of non-official Members, to a vanishing point. . . . . The Executive Government have all their own way in ordering the allotment of 'obligatory' expenditure. The Finance Committee is not allowed to touch that considerable and really important part of the Financial Statement. In certain provinces, notably in Bombay and the United Provinces, the Government take the committees into their confidence much earlier than January and discuss the budget items with the Members in an informal manner; the advantages of such a course are obvious and have been recognised by the administrations concerned. In Madras, however, the rule of keeping the committee uninformed of what happens in the Finance Secretariat is strictly followed, except for the invitation that is sent out, a few weeks prior to the meeting in January, to the non-official Members of the Finance Committeee to make such suggestions as they please for the consideration of Government. More than once, these defects have been brought to the notice of the Local Government, but without any result."

25. The People's Opinion, of the 1st November, remarks:—"More than three-fourths of the blame now showered on the Indian bureaucracy would disappear if the members of that body would take care to change their 'official' attitude and meet people on terms of equality and sympathy and view their representations from what they call a new angle of vision. Mass education being entirely absent and moral courage, that parent of many virtues, being still rare among the people in India, the conditions here are no doubt highly favourable to the growth and luxuriance of what we may dub as the 'official spirit.' In spite, however, of such favourable conditions, the supreme duty of every educated and cultured son of the soil is to see that he does not fall a victim to the insidious influence of the spirit we are here condemning. . . . . It is gratifying to note that already many an official has thrown off his reserve and hauteur and begun to thaw into sympathy and good will towards the people and their representatives. The old-fashioned orthodox official who considers himself to be of a different species from the ordinary man may still be met here and there; but so inexorable are forces which work against him that himself and the spirit which he typifies will surely be swept into a deserved oblivion thus leading to an ennobling of the rank and file of officialdom who will feel their interests to be one with those of the people they serve."

The official spirit.

People's Opinion, Trivandrum, Nov. 1st, 1916.

26. New India, of the 2nd November, has the following:—

New India, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

"Topsy-Turvy.

"It is very quaint to read that the Peninsular and Oriental steamer so-and-so 'left Bombay with the homeward mails'. In any country, save India, a steamer leaving its ports carries the foreign or outward mails. Here we are all supposed to regard England as 'home,' and Indians meekly speak of 'going home' when they mean going abroad to England. It may seem a small thing, but these small things create a habit of thought which is anti-national and mischievous. It is essentially topsy-turvy. We always turn the things right end up, and call the mails approaching Bombay inward mails, and those going away outward mails. Why should we pretend that we are living in England and residing here for a time, when we are living in our own dear motherland and are at home in her bosom?"

"Going home."

27. In a leader under this heading, the Indian Patriot, of the 2nd November, remarks:—"The division of people into castes according to avocational aptitudes is peculiar to India, and a perpetuation of the system is the aim of Varnashrama Dharma advocates. There is likewise a class of people among Anglo-Indian politicians who would go to the foundation of the Varnashrama Dharma and revive the division of people in accordance with their special aptitudes. These would divide people into two classes, one possessing mental ability and the other possessing executive reliability. Indians possess mental ability, Englishmen alone possess executive reliability. So the public service in India should be based on this division of qualities, those who possess mental ability being drafted into the judicial service and the others into the executive line. . . . . On this principle, the Indiaman made a forecast of what it considered would be the report of the Public Services Commission, before the Commissioners began to compile their report, in order to see how far the forecast would be like the report . . . . . How did it come that Indians displaced Englishmen as Barristers and Judges? Only because Indians had free access to those offices and places filled by Englishmen. So far as the executive offices are concerned, Indians are expected first to prove their fitness and then to claim the office. The impossibility of this is apparent. . . . . The presumption is that there is something inherent in the Indian to induce in him executive incapacity; and what can be presumed need not be proved. . . . . What are the qualities required in our officers which cannot be cultivated. To say that Indians are unfit to be executive officers is to assume that they cannot be fit to govern themselves at any time. It is this kind of assumption that provokes people. . . . . Much of the annoyance and irritation caused to the Indian mind is due to the habit of assuming racial superiority as the Indiaman does. Why should executive incapacity lurk in the Indian? Is there anything wrong with his mentality or with his training or with his environments? Failings due to training or surroundings can be removed by modifying them. . . . . We must take it that Indians belong to an inferior species which is incapable of learning one particular work, rather the qualities which are necessary to perform that work. Hence they must ever be content with doing judicial work for which, indeed, their capacity and their qualifications are not denied."

Indian Patriot, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

Executive reliability.

New India, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

The Theosophical Society and liberty by its President.

28. In concluding a leader on this subject in New India, of the 3rd November, Mrs. Besant says:—"The Theosophical Society has never been popular with the British authorities, because this brotherhood that it preaches and practises draws all castes, races and religions together and thus fosters the feeling of nationality. Christianity is all right; it attacks all other religions and even has internecine conflicts; that can never be a bond of union. Hinduism is tolerable, with its castes, and its sub-castes, and its outcastes, and its refusal to admit outsiders to its fold; it can only unite its own believers. Islam is more objectionable, for it is thoroughly brotherly within, but still it antagonises all other faiths. But theosophy! no; it attacks none, but unites all. Hence it has always been looked on with suspicion, as our members in the subordinate services know but too well.

"Still no local Government or lower official has ever ventured to prohibit its meetings, or to hamper its lectures or teachings. Criminal Investigation Department men have always attended them, but have been fairly unobtrusive. The interference by the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces and Berar is the first of its kind. Never before, in any country except in Russia and Austria, has a theosophical lecturer been prevented from addressing his fellow theosophists and the outside public.

"This new departure is not only a breach of religious neutrality, but threatens the liberty of all religions, since most of the leading men belong to some faith, and many are most devoutly religious. If justice is equally meted out, the Lord Bishop of Madras ought not to be allowed to enter his Diocese, nor to preach in his Cathedral, for in his article in the Nineteenth Century and After there occur sentences as strong as, if not stronger than anything I have myself written. One sentence is enough to bring an article within the Press Act, however admirable the rest of it may be. Hence he is as 'prejudicial to the public safety' as I am.

"Under these conditions which threaten every faith alike, all brave men who love liberty should rally round the Theosophical Society. I expect very large accessions to its ranks of lovers of liberty, so that this first attack on it may also be the last."

IV.—Native States.

29. Referring to the departure for Delhi of Mr. Alfred Chatterton to sit on the Industries Commission, the Karnataka, of the 28th October, remarks:—

The Director of Industries, Mysore.

Karnataka, Bangalore City, Oct. 28th, 1916.

"Undoubtedly, Mr. Chatterton is a very able man. He knows a bit of almost everything; and where his knowledge does not suffice, his unique personality supplies the desideratum. Whether he has the perfected skill and the mastery of details which belong to a true expert, or whether his stock-in-trade is confined to ready generalizations and a resistless tongue, he has all the external accomplishments of a man of business. He knows when to speak out and when to be silent; when to be liberal in ridicule and when to smile in radiance; whom to snub and whom to propitiate; how to get work done and how to apportion credit. In short, his professional worth, great as it may be, falls into the background when his personal distinctions are taken into consideration. He has always professed an abundance of solicitude for the welfare of Mysore; but he seems to belong to that type of an Englishman who thinks that the 'native' can be a very good servant, but not as good a master as himself,—a very good foreman, but not as good an engineer as his own distinguished self. He is helpful and condescending to those who seek his patronage; but to those who dare to look at him as an equal or to demand things as a matter of right, he is self-conscious enough to play the tiger. With gifts so diverse and opportunities so wide, he indeed attempted much in Mysore, he has talked much, written much, and spent much; it would be a surprise if absolutely nothing came out of all that. But such of the achievements as he may claim as his own could as well have been accomplished by even less distinguished men. The setting of a few pumps and a few oil engines does not require one so high and so costly. As for the new sandalwood oil factory, while acknowledging that he was instrumental in its erection, we cannot forget that the idea had been in the air for a number of years in the past. . . . . It is also a question how much Mr. Chatterton would have accomplished without the driving,—even compelling hands of Sir Visvesvaraya behind him and without the over-liberal financial assistance of Government. One view of Mr. Chatterton's career is summed up in the saything that he is a verv capable man, but that our Government do not know how to extract work from him. Even if this opinion, which evidently comes from his admirers, were admissible, his departure from Mysore is obviously not to be regarded as a loss."

30. The Western Star, of the 28th October, writes:—"There is, as many of our readers must by now be aware, a proposal under consideration for the abolition of the post of Director of Public Instruction in this State. Ominous rumours that such a proposal was to be adumbrated in suddenly and mysteriously conceived schemes of glorification in connection with the so-called Golden Jubilee of Vernacular Education were afloat a few months ago, as our readers doubtless remember, and it now certainly appears as though there was only too much ground for those rumours. . . . . We feel that we cannot condemn the present proposal too strongly, and as for the grounds on which it is understood to be based, we have no hesitation in stigmatising them as hollow and absurd. . . . . It really passes our comprehension how anybody could seriously contend that, simply because the Department of Public Instruction has undergone a partial process of bifurcation, its Directorship has ceased to be a necessity. . . . . We fervently hope that wiser counsels will prevail and that the Government will,

The Directorship of Public Instruction, Travancore.

Western Star, Trivandrum, Oct. 28th, 1916.

after due deliberation, sternly set its face against one of the most retrograde proposals which has ever been laid before it. We have by no means exhausted all that could be said against the proposal, though we believe we have written enough to expose its hollow and absurd character. However, should we find attempts being continued to bring about what would be a calamitous step from the point of view of the genuine efficiency of our educational system, we shall not hesitate to return to this theme and raise our voice again on behalf of the people, whose true interests have apparently not yet all been consulted by those who want to practise economy at the sacrifice of efficiency."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, Nov. 1st, 1916.

The Chiefs' Conference at Delhi.

31. The Karnataka, of the 1st November, observes:—"The telegraphic account so far furnished of the Conference of Ruling Chiefs and Princes which met at Delhi on Monday last is too meagre to acquaint us with the exact functions and purposes of that august assemblage. We fervently hope its proceedings will not bear any resemblance to the transactions of the incomparably humbler body which rattles away during every Dasara at Mysore. So far as could be gathered from the opening speech of His Excellency the Viceroy—among the excellences of which lucidity is certainly not one,—the Princes have to discuss 'certain special matters' of interest to themselves, their States and their people. What those 'prosaic but useful' matters specifically are, we have not yet had an opportunity of knowing. The Viceroy has also laid down the no doubt plausible principle that the Princes need not trouble themselves about the affairs of British India, and that His Excellency himself would not interfere in their own domestic concerns. So far as the Princes are concerned, there has never yet been a single case of violation of the above rule by them. As for the omnipresence and omnipotence of the Government of India and its unhesitating readiness to meddle with the affairs of Native States, proofs are only too abundant and too obvious. To mention only one instance, does not the Mysore Press Act owe its prolonged existence to the jealous care that is bestowed upon it in British India? . . . . His Excellency the Viceroy paid a glowing compliment to the Foreign Department, which many a Prince must have at heart found it hard to endorse. The dark schemes conceived by that department and the embarrassment and humiliation wantonly caused to the Princes by its agents in the States are all matters of public knowledge; and it is only after the days of Lord Minto that the States have been breathing a little free air. Even now, the pressure from that side does not seem to have disappeared completely and for ever. Perfect candour and openness is a thing still to be desired in very many cases. In this connection, may we not instance the case of our long-fought dispute for the surplus revenues of the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore? How has the case ended? What are the arrangements for the future? . . . . Let us trust that the patriotic Chiefs and Princes now gathered at the capital of the empire will ask to be allowed to station their agents at the Viceregal Court, so that these ambassadors might, in mutual consultation and as dictated by their respective Governments, formulate the views of Feudatory India in regard to Imperial questions. Let us also hope that His Excellency the Viceroy will be persuaded to remember that what is now needed for the Native States is not the personal elevation of their princes, nor the accumulation of greater power in their hands, but the establishment of constitutional principles and methods in their administration."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

32. Referring to a statement said to have been made by the Crown Prince of Germany that the Germans were ready to end the war and make peace and that it was the Englishmen who were responsible for the continuance of the war, the Swadesamitran, of the 27th October, thinks that this is merely a ruse adopted by the Germans to bring about peace at any cost in order to spare themselves further misery and observes:—Peace at this stage will be most undesirable. It should not be thought of until the German militarism is crushed and the possibility of another war is avoided. We have borne innumerable hardships and there can be no worse difficulties in store for us. So, instead of concluding peace now and allowing the Germans to be elated with the idea that the Allies, in spite of their number, were not able to defeat them and to await the nex best opportunity to begin a war again, the better course will be to continue the war to its bitter end.

The probability of peace.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Oct. 27th, 1916.

33. The Andhrapatrika, of the 1st November, says:—The Germans are advancing in the Dobrudja. This will render the situation safe for the Germans in the east of the Danube. It seems that it will be difficult for the Roumanians and the Russians to cross the Danube, enter Bulgaria and join the army in Salonika. It remains to be seen if the Germans can enter Roumania from the side of the Dobrudja. They cannot enter that country in the east and the south unless the Danube is crossed. It is doubtful if General Mackensen will attempt to cross the Danube in the face of danger. The enemy gained the primary object of their Dobrudja campaign. The Czernovoda and Constanza railway has been rendered useless for the Roumanians and the Russians. The Germans strengthened their position in the north of that railway and sent some of their forces to the southern theatre. A military expert has stated that it is possible for Mackensen to cross the Danube by some tactful manœuvring. He may pretend to cross it at one place and actually do so at another. The telegrams announce that General Hindenberg is devising means to crush Roumania first and then Italy, with a view to enter into a separate treaty with Italy. It appears that Falkenhayn from the west and Mackensen from the east are trying to defeat the Roumanians and that their endeavours have to some measure met with success. It is evident that the reason of the success of the Germans in the eastern theatre is the great strength of their artillery.

Although the situation in the east has given room for some anxiety, that in the west is favourable for the Allies. The French have in four hours reoccupied the fort of Douaumont in the Verdun region, which the Germans took many months to occupy. In this theatre, the Germans have failed in their endeavour to check the advance of the Allies. This is due to the superior strength of the Allies' artillery in this theatre. The situation of the Allies in both the Salonikan and Italian theatres is also favourable. The situation in the Russian theatre is unchanged. The danger from submarine attacks has increased.

The war.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

34. Referring to the shooting down of Roumanian prisoners by the Germans, particularly to the cutting off of the head of a Roumanian Judge before his wife, the Manorama, of the 24th October, asks, "What further evidence is needed to prove that the Germans are a class of wild beasts without tails".

German atrocities.

Manorama, Calicut, Oct. 24th, 1916.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Oct. 24th, 1916.

35. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 24th October, writes:—At the commencement of the war Germany was proud of her vast supplies of munitions and large army. She prided herself on her petrol and poisonous gas, and thought that her enemies would be subdued and that she would reign supreme over all Europe. But Great Britain got her supplies together and made munitions so expeditiously that the sight of these is very embarrassing to the enemy. In Berlin the news of the preparations made by the Allies changes the idea of victory into a dream. The German officers are astonished to find how the Allies were able, in the course of a year, to obtain supplies sufficient for five years.

Why should not the victory be ours?

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Oct. 25th, 1916.

36. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 25th October, writes:—From telegraphic reports it appears that the enemy has dared again to renew his Zeppelin attacks on the South East Coast towns of England. His object in making such attacks is only to frighten England. The British Government is not so cowardly as to be terrified at German frightfulness. Recently enemy æroplanes dropped bombs on the town of Margate which caused some damage to a hotel. A woman and a man were slightly injured. But no official news has yet been received regarding the fate of the raider, for British æroplanes could not have let him off unscattered.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

37. The Qaumi Report, of the 23rd October in a leader, writes:—At present some compatriots have got a mania for repudiating the good services Mussalmans have rendered to the cause of civilization. They have coined the terms Native and Indian, but in their estimation the name Mussalman is not counted by either epithet. They think that Muhammadans have no right to ask for special concessions from the Government.

"The obligations conferred by Mussalmans."

Is it not just that Muhammadans should demand some return and consideration for their services? They ruled over India and brought to it the enlightening influences of civilization and education. They illumined the dark places with the light of sanitation and reform.

The writer, in referring to the ancient history of the Hindus and the Muhammadans and in drawing a contrast between their respective rulers, says that the Hindus did nothing to advance civilization as no archæological remains of the activities exist to indicate their past history. On the contrary, the codes of Muhammadan Emperors like Akbar, Aurangzeb, Firoz Shah and Sher Shah point to the fact that they have done much in the way of works of public utility. For example, they founded hospitals, built bridges, established schools, formed lakes and constructed good roads, etc., many of which exist to this day. All these together with the Khutub Minor erected by the Emperor Khutbuddin are proofs positive of Muhammadan civilization and India's indebtedness thereto What place is there in India from which the Muhammadans have not dispelled the darkness and chased away squalor? Muhammadans did not keep their language and learning to themselves, but spread the knowledge of Arabic and Persian among Hindus and produced thousands of brilliant poets and ripe scholars among them. But did ever a Muhammadan Emperor issue an order that Muhammadans should be given free access to Hindu homes? Hindus kept themselves aloof from them and shunned even their very shadow, but the Muhammadans never complained of this.

The way Muhammadans are being treated now is obvious. Examples of such treatment may be seen at the Railway stations during the hot weather how when Muhammadan passengers call for water, the Brahman water-man treats them and how they are obliged to drink water in vulgar fashion by holding their hands into which the water is poured!

Home Rule is doubtless a good thing, but in such circumstances how can a Muhammadan expect to receive equal friendly or fraternal treatment at their hands? Muhammadans are desirous of Home Rule, but they dread its consequences and the attempt to solve this enigma.

II.—Home Administration.

38. The Andhrapatrika, of the 30th October, characterises the conduct of the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad in insisting on provision being made for seating the Criminal Investigation Department officers in the Ahmedabad Provincial Conference, as highhanded, and remarks:—It is highly unjust to annoy the innocent with the presence of the Criminal Investigation Department officers. The cry that this injustice is allowed to exist unchecked is to be heard all over India. It is regrettable that the authorities do not seek to mitigate the evil. We hope that the Bombay Government are by no means a party to the incident above referred to. It is to be expected that that Government will warn the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad. To give the Criminal Investigation Department officers a prominent place in the conference is to stifle the independence of those that had assembled there and defeat the object of the meeting which is to communicate to the Government the real views of the people. It will be well to send a circular to every District Magistrate to the effect that they should not deprive the people of their full rights and that they should conduct themselves in such a way as not to defeat the object with which the Criminal Investigation Department was created. We trust that the Government of India and the Local Governments will consult together and see that the people are not unnecessarily annoyed by the Criminal Investigation Department officers.

Andhrapatrika, Madras, Oct. 30th, 1916.

The highhandedness of the Criminal Investigation Department.

39. Referring to the extraordinary but improper order of the District Magistrate of Ahmadabad, calling upon the Executive Committee of the Provincial Conference to provide the Criminal Investigation Department reporters with seats therein, the Manorama, of the 31st October, fails to understand what good can result from the presence of such reporters at the conference, who, it thinks, would do better to enter it like ordinary persons and report privately on the proceedings thereof, if their object be to know whether anything of an anarchical nature is contained in the speeches delivered thereat, and invites the attention of the Government to such thoughtless actions, like this, of District Magistrate, which cannot fail to produce considerable agitation among the people.

40. In an article briefly reviewing the judgment on the New India security case, the Swadeshabhimani, of the 27th October, says:—The reasons assigned for dismissing the appeals can hardly be deemed satisfactory. The opinion of the majority on the Bench shows that the Magistrate's order was illegal and thus the security amount is still in the Government Treasury, the point being unsettled as to whom it should belong. Of the passages objected to, as some are considered objectionable and others unobjectionable, it was inevitable that the Judges should have disagreed on this question. The decision of the Judges thereon is consequently not favourable to Mrs. Besant. We are glad to find, however, that the Chief Justice expressed his regret that the Press Act was extremely comprehensive like a huge net, or that it was like a weapon which was sharp and many-pointed. This augurs well. The deputation which will shortly be received by Lord Chelmsford to urge the repeal of the Press Act will have gained fresh support from the views of this Judge. We say fresh support, because Justice Jenkins of the Calcutta High Court too has likewise expressed his disgust at the nature of this Act. Although this is a past incident, the memory of it must still be fresh in the minds of the people. We may be sure that Lord Chelmsford at least will show his liberality by repealing the Press Act and removing thereby the restraint under which the poor newspaper editors have to labour at present.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Oct. 27th, 1916.

The New India security case.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 27th, 1916.

On the same subject, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 27th October, writes:—Although the Judges dismissed the appeal, they have at the same time remarked that the Press Act should be either repealed or amended, that Mrs. Besant's writings contain no offence against the British principles of law and constitution but only transgress the provisions of the Press Act, and that her attitude is unobjectionable. The judgment shows that British justice is still extant in our High Courts. The Amrita Bazaar Patrika writes that either the Press Act should be repealed or all newspaper editors in India should close their offices. If newspapers should cease to exist, the British Government will sink to the condition of the Governments of olden times. Even if the Government be honest and just, the subordinate officers at least happen to be autocratic. If the newspapers fail to expose this autocratic tendency, injustice prevails in the land, and where it reaches its climax, revolutions come about. Hence it is never expedient to stop newspapers. The proper course is to perform the obsequies of the Press Act. The whole of India will be grateful to the Madras High Court for this sound judgment.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

The New India security case.

The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 2nd November, writes:—Since the dismissal of Mrs. Besant's appeal by the High Court, the press is full of both praise and denunciation of the Home Rule propaganda. Some of these writings are fair and just, others quite the contrary. Mrs Besant may appeal to the Privy Council. Even the Privy Council might decide against her. The disappointment might even hasten her death. But the people are firm in the belief that the seeds of Home Rule, which she has already sown in this country, will be sure to germinate and grow to big trees and bear fruit which will add to the glory of both India and England.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 31st, 1916.

The New India security case.

In the course of an impassioned leading article on this subject, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 31st October, writes:—Although the Judges have given their decision so as not to affect the prestige of the Government, they have, at the same time, suggested the lines on which the administration should be conducted in order to ensure the stability of the empire. In making these suggestions they had to comment on the merits and demerits of the press law. The Press Act is a worst conceivable measure. If a heavy security is demanded, how can those patriots who are poor find the money! And if the amount of security, the press and the paper are all forfeited to Government, what remedy have they? Will the Government be any great gainers by such forfeiture? Will the aggrieved be any great losers thereby? Shortsighted people are apt to think so. But more far-seeing persons know the fate that awaits the authors of wicked deeds and they wonder at the inscrutable ways of Providence. The Almighty makes the wicked bring about their own ruin. Did Rāmā wish to kill Rāvanā? Did he wish to send to Hades all that offended him? Though he did not wish it, did not circumstances bring about this end owing to the misdeeds of Rāvanā? Is there room for this kind of havoc in Europe? Why is there not? Is it not because the masses as well as the newspapers have full liberty to express their views? Do not the traditions of British justice allow one to speak the truth for the benefit of humanity? Is not constitutionalism the result of this liberty among them? The Judges of the Madras High Court have clearly pointed out that there should be similar liberty under the British rule in India. We must heartily applaud the attempts of Justice Abdur Rahim and of Justice Seshagiri Ayyar to maintain the principles of British justice. The Madras Mail in displaying its capacity for mischief in criticising their judgment has undermined its own status. Unless the Press Act is repealed, the British Government cannot lay claim to any glory; the faith in British justice will remain shaken; the officers of Government will continue to abuse its provisions and produce discontent among the people; the mutual affection and good-will between the Government and the people is bound to disappear, with the result that both the rulers and the ruled will come to grief.

41. In reviewing the report on the administration of civil justice in this Presidency, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 25th October, draws attention to the regrettable increase in the volume of litigation in this country, and observes that the substitution, wherever possible, of village panchayats for village courts will produce better results and give more satisfaction to the people.

Civil justice in the Presidency.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 25th, 1916.

42. The Qaumi Report, of the 24th October, writes:—In his judgment in the New India case, the Acting Chief Justice has made an observation to the effect that the setting up of printing presses and the publication of newspapers under the Press Act is a very dangerous business. This speaking the truth by our worthy compatriot has grieved the Madras Mail. Nay rather has it been pained thereby for it has by hint and innuendo been asking in three successive articles why the Hon'ble Moulvi Sahib should think that journalistic responsibility is fraught with danger. In one place it insinuates that it is not a lawyer like the Acting Chief Justice and in another it asks in amazement whether it is really so. It shows its disapproval and opposition in an astounding manner and conceals its anger in humurous metaphor.

The freedom of the press (the Madras Mail's innuendo).

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Oct. 24th, 1916.

We do not quite understand what occasion there was for the Madras Mail to be offended. Perhaps it does not understand the word "danger". Probably it does not feel the Press Act. Perhaps it does not admit the worth of the sympathy of the Acting Chief Justice. But all these things cannot make its innuendo effective.

Undoubtedly the fault of the Acting Chief Justice lies in the fact that he is not acquainted with the secrets of the profession. Probably he has never been an editor himself. If before making the observation he had noticed the state of the Mail, he would never have made it or would have least excepted the Madras Mail and its supporters.

Danger is something which cannot be admitted by the Mail on any grounds logical or philosophical. Yes! If in the course of time framers of the Press Act be favourably disposed towards it perhaps it may be able to observe the risk. It is a fact that it is superior to us all in the matter of press experience and possibly its irony may turn out to be true, that our profession is not a risky business as declared by the Chief Justice. But what we see with our own eyes and understand with our own mind is unfortunately nearer than what our ancient contemporary asserts with so much warmth. Again in view of its long experience it was necessary that the Acting Chief Justice should have reinforced his judgment with the opinion of the Madras Mail bearing in mind that he himself was not an editor and that he was in error in regarding the Press Act in the light of his knowledge instead of seeing it through the professional spectacles of our respected contemporary. He was also wrong in taking a lesson from the cases of the Comrade, Hamdard, the Zamindar, etc, instead of observing the examples of the Madras Mail and its contemporaries.

The Madras Mail claims that the remark does not apply to itself and its supporters. It should kindly understand therefore that it is not entitled to this sympathy. If it can disclose the secret of its experience it behoves it to show how other papers may become as fortunate as itself (to be continued).

(d) Education.

43. The Swadesamitran, of the 28th October, contains a long leader advocating the principle of imparting instruction through the vernaculars, and observes that, while in every other country in the world the medium of instruction is the vernacular of the country, there is no reason why a different rule should be followed in India.

Education through the vernaculars.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

44. Referring to the fact that Mr. Natesan's amendment on the subject of the constitution of the Syndicate was put to the vote and lost, the Andhrapatrika, of the 30th October, says:—This proclaims well the helplessness of the Fellows of the University and the all-powerful position of the members of the Syndicate. The present University regulations and the influence of authority in the Syndicate have enabled one or two colleges in this Presidency town to wield the entire executive power themselves. The amendment moved by Mr. Ramalinga Reddi also was thrown out. What other reason could there be for reasonable amendments being thus rejected than the present constitution of the Syndicate. Will the Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri soon introduce his Bill to amend Lord Curzon's Act of 1904?

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 26th, 1916.

Municipal Chairmen and their powers of nomination.

45. Adverting to the order of the Government that the Chairman of the Salem Municipality should abide by the advice of a committee, inclusive of the Inspector of Schools of that circle, in choosing a Principal for the Salem College, the Hindu Nesan, of the 26th October, says:—We are surprised at this order. It cannot be said that the present Chairman, the Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimma Ayyar, is not capable of choosing a competent Principal for the college. Usually, no appointment is made in any municipal school or college by the chairman of a municipality, without the Inspector of Schools of the circle or the Assistant Inspector of Schools of the district being consulted in the matter. If, in the case of the Salem College, the Government thought that this was not sufficient, it could have suggested that the Director of Public Instruction should also be consulted. Instead of this, the chairman has been asked to consult a committee, and we do not approve of this. The chairman of a municipality should have some freedom in the matter of making appointments. If he is asked to abide by the advice of a committee, it means that the Government has no confidence in his discretion. It is enough if the Government interfers when the nominations made by municipal chairmen are found to be improper. We do not know who are the members of the committee referred to by the Government. We hope Mr. Vijayaraghavachariar is in it. A committe without him is no good.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 27th, 1916.

Sanitation in the Telugu districts.

46. The Andhrapatrika, of the 27th October, says:—It is the Telugu districts in this Presidency that suffered most from insanitary conditions during the year 1915. The pecuniary help rendered by the Government to the District Boards is very little. They have fixed their grant at one-fourth of what the District Boards earn in the shape of land cess. The land cess collected in poor districts being very little, the Government grant is also comparatively small. The District Boards are under such circumstances quite helpless. It is, therefore, that our leaders have been asking the Government to set apart the Abkāri or some other revenue exclusively for these local institutions. If we, who are Andhras, wish to escape from the ravages of contagious and other diseases, we should spare no pains to get the above boon from the Government.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 25th, 1916.

Allowances to Municipal Commissioners.

47. Referring to the question of granting allowances to Municipal Commissioners, the Andhraprakasika, of the 25th October, says:—The cost of administration is already very heavy, and it would be a very great hardship if the authorities should begin to grant allowances to Municipal Commissioners, members of the District and Taluk Boards, and to the Honourable Members of Legislative Councils. People are already complaining of over-texation in municipalities. We are badly in want of funds for such purposes as the improvement of sanitation, the repair of roads, and the supply of drinking water. The authorities could not spare any money for granting old age pensions to poor municipal officers. Under such circumstances it is quite inadvisable to arrange to grant allowances to Municipal Councillors.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Ongole Municipal Council.

48. A correspondent to the Andhraprakasika, of the 28th October, says that His Excellency the Governor has allowed the Ongole Municipality the privilege to elect three more councillors. It is now four months since the privilege was granted and there are four seats now vacant in the Council. But the Chairman, says the paper, has not only failed to arrange for elections, but had a resolution passed in the Council to the effect that there will be no elections until the next February. This is not only ridiculous but also regrettable, remarks the correspondent. He prays that the Government will direct the Chairman to make immediate arrangements for filling up three of the vacant seats by election.

The Malabar District Board.

49. In reviewing the report on the working of the Malabar District Board, the Manorama, of the 27th October, regrets that for want of candidates, the Government had to nominate members to some of the varcancies on the Taluk Boards, which reveals the indifference of the people in matters of local self-government.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct 27th, 1916.

The Malabar District Board.

In reviewing the report on the working of the Malabar District Board, the Kerala Patrika, of the 28th October, points out that, so long as District officers continue to be the Presidents of District Boards, the defects in their administration will not see the light of day, which, however, will be brought to light by the Collector, in case non-officials or some other officers be appointed as Presidents thereof, draws attention to the accumulation of a large surplus of nearly four lakhs of rupees, without its being utilised for useful purposes, such as the improvement of the sanitary condition of the district, the construction of bridges over rivers and canals, at least in important landing places, etc., and hopes that the Board will, as pointed out by the Government, adopt measures for combating malaria in the Walluvanad taluk, and increase the number of hospitals and dispensaries in the district.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Malabar District Board.

In commenting upon the report on the administration of the Malabar District Board, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 1st November, demands the appointment of non-officials as Presidents and Vice-Presidents of Taluk Boards, if not of District Boards, and deplores the apathy of the people in civic affairs.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Nov. 1st, 1916.

The Palghat Municipality.

50. In reviewing the report on the working of the Palghat Municipality, the Manorama, of the 27th October, rejoices that the people of the place are evincing great interest in civic affairs, endorses the remarks of the Government regarding the condition of the roads, and invites the attention of the council to the necessity of planting trees on either sides thereof. The paper also refers to the regrettable condition in which the Dance market is kept by the municipality, despite the fact that it brings considerable income to it, and concludes by saying that it reserves its comments on the suggestions of Mr. Macqueen, the Divisional officer, to a future issue.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 27th, 1916.

The Palghat Municipality.

In commenting upon the report on the working of the Palghat Municipality, the Kerala Patrika, of the 28th October, draws attention to the defects, as pointed out by the Sub-Collector, in its administration, which, it thinks, will be removed by the appointment of a capable full-time Secretary, and to the necessity of improving the Dance market, from which the municipality derives considerable income, and congratulates the municipality on the due collection of the taxes, without leaving any arrears behind.

The Cochin Municipality.

51. In reviewing the report on the administration of the Cochin Municipality for the year 1915–16, the Sujena Mitram, of the 25th October, makes remarks similar to those of the Kerala Sanchari of the 11th October, reported on page 1858 of Report No. 43, and adds that it is regrettable that the council pays little heed to the education of Indian girls in this town, and that there should be a great many objectionable features in the administration during the time of Mr. A. L. Shirgkar.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Oct. 24th, 1916.

The successor of Lord Carmichael in Bengal.

52. Referring to the rumour that Sir Robert Chalmers, who was the Governor of Ceylon, would succeed Lord Carmichael in Bengal, the Hindu Nesan, of the 24th October, says:—We learn that the Bengal papers are at one in protesting against this choice, and we endorse their opinion. In the present condition of Bengal, neither Sir M. Odwyer, whose name is also mentioned in this connection, nor Sir Robert Chalmers would do. Their succeeding Lord Carmichael will resemble a brilliant lamp being replaced by a fire-fly. Civilians and others, with narrow views on account of their official position, will not be fit to be the Governor of that Presidency. It is only a British statesman, with liberal views and in touch with the British political world as a non-official, that will befit this post.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 31st, 1916.

The successor of Lord Carmichael.

The Keralodayam, of the 31st October, protests against the appointment, as advocated by the Anglo-Indian press, of Sir Robert Chalmers as Governor of Bengal, who, as Governor of Ceylon, defied the courts of justice and the liberty of the people, and draws attention to Mr. Eardly Norton's letter in the Englishman. According to the paper a respectable gentleman from England, who has a knowledge of English institutions and their working, is preferable to one who has passed the Indian Civil Service examination; and it sees no reason why the time-honoured custom of not elevating a member of the Civil Service beyond a Lieutenant-Governorship, should be departed from in the present case.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 26th, 1916.

Students and the Government.

53. In the course of a leader under this heading, the Swadesamitran, of the 26th October, observes:—In England there is a separate department for looking after the health of the students and the numerous hospitals for giving medical help to them. Still the President of the Medical Board for schools says, in a report recently issued by him, that the health of the students in England is not very satisfactory and points out several defects in their diet, sanitation, etc. If this is the condition of the students in England, where the generality of the people have had a little education and where the average income of a man is many times that of an Indian, how anxious should we not be regarding the health of the Indian students, who have none of the facilities enjoyed by the students in England? The majority of our students are weak and they do not enjoy their life as merrily as the English students do. A number of the Indian students use spectacles and this is due evidently to the weakness of their cerebral nerves. It is very necessary to ascertain the cause of this. Steps should also be taken to examine the students and see if their health is all right, and, if it is not, remedial measures should be adopted without delay. No doubt all this would mean great expenditure. But, considering the importance of the subject, the money spent on it would be well spent. The argument of the London Times that the expenditure on this item should not be reduced on account of the pressure caused by the war holds good even in the case of the Indian students. We hope the Government of India will soon make a move in this matter.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Oct. 27th, 1916.

A memorial to Lord Hardinge.

54. The Bombay correspondent to the Prapanchamitran, of the 27th October, says:—The call for subscriptions for a statue of Lord Hardinge has been responded to liberally. But I am yet to know what Lord Hardinge has done for us to merit such a memorial. All that he has done is to revive the Press Law which was almost a dead letter, to create a new law called the Defence of India Act and to divide the people of Burdwan against their will. Really! a Viceroy who has done so much good does deserve a statue! If, at the bottom of this statute, these benefits conferred by him are also inscribed, it will be grand!

O brethren! Are you not aware of the famine in this country and the condition of education and industries in it?

55. Referring to the memorandum presented by the elected members of the Imperial Legislative Council, suggesting the reforms to be introduced in India after the war, the Vaisyamitran *, of the 16th October, says:—It is rather curious that the reforms suggested in this memorandum do not include the abolition of the Press Act. We do not know whether this is due to forgetfulness or the ignorance of the signatories to it of the hardships caused by this Act. There are only three months more for the congress to meet and discuss about the reforms which should necessarily be introduced in India. Though the extremist party in the congress may demand swaraj for India as the only panacea for the existing political defects, the moderate party will be satisfied if only the desirable reforms are introduced in the administration. Whatever may be the view of either party in the congress, it is only the grant of swaraj to India on colonial lines that will do credit to the magnanimity of the British.

Reforms after the war.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotta, Oct. 16th, 1916.

56. The Vidyabhanu, of the 30th October, approves of the view expressed by the new Viceroy that he should have larger powers in the matter of nominating members to his Legislative Council, and says that by increasing his powers the Secretary of State for India will surely increase the opportunity for him to do good to this country during his regime.

Increased powers to the Viceroy.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Oct. 30th, 1916.

57. Referring to the list of articles which may be sent to the British and Indian troops on active service as gifts, the Andhrapatrika, of the 27th October, says:—It will be much more advantageous to furnish this list to the classes of people who grow or manufacture most of the articles than to the English-educated classes. It is not enough to publish the list in the official gazettes in the vernaculars. It should be published in the vernacular newspapers. It is to be regretted that while the Government required the English papers to publish the list, they failed to invite the vernacular papers to publish it in the vernaculars.

The attitude of the Government towards vernacular newspapers.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 27th, 1916.

58. The Andhrapatrika, of the 28th October, comments on the proceedings of the Sixth Nellore District Conference as follows:—The President entertains no doubt about the valour of the Andhras. But he said that unless some reasonable facilities are afforded and sufficient encouragement is given, it is not to be expected that the Andhras, who have descended from valiant ancestors, will join the army in considerable numbers. They are now living a prosperous and comfortable life, and it is not proper that their sons joining the army should be paid less than what they pay to the coolies in their service. If the Andhra young men are given hopes of promotion to higher offices in the military service, and are adequately paid, they will certainly be attracted to that service. If the authorities should follow the suggestions of the President of the Conference, open institutions for giving military training, and constitute local volunteer corps, we have no doubt that even during the present war, the Andhras will enlist themselves and manifest their valour in active service.

An Andhra army.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

59. Referring to the fact that a committee was appointed to consider the means whereby to improve the condition of the labouring classes in England after the war, the Sasilekha, of the 27th October, prays that the Government of India will follow the example of the Government in England, and take steps to ameliorate the condition of the ryots in India by providing them with sufficient food, good parks and proper houses.

The Kerala Sanchari, of the 1st November, writes:—The enforcement of the Press Act and the Defence of India Act against a well-known and influential person like Mrs. Besant must be regarded as India's good fortune, as she is sure to fight the matter out and thereby bring to light the severity and impropriety thereof.

The Calicut Municipal hospital.

61. Referring to the question of removing the municipal hospital at Calicut, the Kerala Patrika, of the 28th October, thinks that the hospital, being conveniently situated at present, should not be removed to another place unless it be to a far better one, and that the proposed removal of it to the beach is not desirable at all. It is of opinion that the present hospital should be extended by acquiring the lands surrounding it, to which, it is hoped, the Basel Mission people will not raise any objection.

As regards the proposed removal of the municipal hospital at Calicut to the beach, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 1st November, is of opinion that the extension of the present building will be far better than the step contemplated.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

The Nellore District Conference.

62. In commenting on the proceedings of the Sixth Nellore District Conference, the Andhrapatrika, of the 1st November, says:—In dwelling on the subject of local self-government, the President stated that the rulers had not introduced the requisite reforms in the Local Boards and the Panchayats. He urged the necessity of granting financial independence to these local bodies and of extending their powers. Although the reason why the Andhras do not join the army is, as stated by the President, the existing terms of military service, yet it will be well to take steps to form as in Bengal, Andhra regiments in the Andhra country. The suggestion of the President that education should be imparted through the medium of the vernaculars till the college classes are reached, deserves to be noted by educationists.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Nellore District Conference.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 28th October, says:—The suggestion of the President of the Nellore District Conference that the office of the District Board Engineer may be abolished, and that the Taluk Board Presidents may satisfactorily do the work of the Boards with the help of the Assistant Engineers, deserves to be considered.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Oct. 25th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

63. The Desamata, of the 25th October, says:—So long as the Press Act is not removed from the Indian statute book, the Indian papers, however loyal they may be, have to be in danger of falling victims to it under the benign British Government. Though Mrs. Besant spent a large amount of money in vain, yet she deserves the gratitude of the Indians for proclaiming to the word the helpless condition of the owners of newspapers in India.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Oct. 28th, 1916.

The Bombay Provincial Conference.

64. In an article giving a brief summary of the Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah's presidential address at the recent session of the Bombay Provincial Conference at Ahmedabad, the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 28th October, says:—Mr. Jinnah suggests that there should be separate electorates for Moslems in both Municipal and Legislative Council elections. This means that the election of Moslems should rest in the hands of the Moslems alone. We shall have no objection to this proposal, if the Government should agree to it. We should only rejoice to see our Moslem brethren prosper. The fact remains, however, that although there are said to be only four castes in India, their number is in truth four thousand. If all these should claim separate electorates for all local board, municipal and Legislative Council elections, would it be possible to grant their wish? Mr. Jinnah would do well to consider this aspect of the question and shape his views accordingly.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Oct. 27th, 1916.

Home Rule for India.

65. In a leading article under the heading "This is what we wanted" the Swadeshabhimani, of the 27th October, says:—Although the desire for Home Rule was first instilled into the minds of educated Indians when the venerable Dr. Dadabhai Nowroji announced at the Calcutta Session of the Congress that Swaraj was the goal of our political agitation, yet it is since the encouragement received in this regard from that most popular Viceroy Lord Hardinge that the whole nation has begun to discuss the question by peaceful and law-abiding methods and is also strenuously exerting in order to acquire fitness for obtaining the same. The Anglo-Indians and a few others have no doubt been in the habit of condemning and ridiculing this demand. But this can no longer be so. For, no less a body than the non-official members of the Supreme Legislative Council have submitted a memorandum to be forwarded to the Secretary of State indicating what reforms should be effected in the administration of this country at the close of the war. The twelve reforms urged in this memorandum, when carefully examined, show that there is very little difference between these demands and the resolutions of the congress and the Provincial Conferences in regard to Home Rule. With the grant of these twelve reforms, we may say that India will have obtained three-fourths of Home Rule. The memorandum has only asked for a non-official majority in the Legislative Councils, but has not stated in what proportion it should be. But true Home Rule, however, would leave no room for a mixture of official and non-official elements. If the Government are not prepared at present to entrust legislation wholly to the people. it is suggested in some quarters, that there may be a Government council to exercise control over these councils. This is no doubt a good idea. One important suggestion among those now made is that the strength of both Supreme and Provincial Councils should be increased. This increase will create opportunities for giving wider recognition to the principle of class representation. This does not clash with the principle of Home Rule. Further, the repeal of the Arms Act, the organisation of Indian Volunteer Corps and the admission of Indians to the higher posts in the army, all imply the Home Rule principle. The suggestion that the Legislative Council should be the supreme body in all matters of administrative interest, except in regard to Imperial questions, and that, in extraordinary cases, when a particular measure is considered objectionable, none but the representative of His Imperial Majesty should have the power of vetoing it, is of far-reaching importance. The memorandum has been signed by 19 out of the 25 non-official members of the council, of whom 3 were absent. To dilate on the competency of these to speak for the nation or on the regard in which they are held by the Government and the people alike is as ridiculous as to hold up an electric lamp to witness the splendour of the sun. If either the Anglo-Indians or the officers of Government should call these men irresponsible, those words can have, no value. Officials no longer urge this objection that the men making the demands are irresponsible. And there can be no doubt that His Excellency the Viceroy too, being fully convinced of the weight that must be attached to the memorandum submitted by the members of his own council, has duly forwarded it. If the Anglo-Indians, who have neither proper arguments nor experience, nor an impartial mind nor sympathy, should still persist in wagging their tongue, who can seal their lips? But no fair-minded person can any longer object that the demand of Swaraj does not come from responsible persons. This is what we wanted. Further, the plea that there can be no harmony among people of such heterogeneous castes and creeds as in India has been rendered equally groundless by the fact that the 19 signatories included among them Hindus, Moslems, Parsis and others. Instead of merely stating that diversity of castes and creeds was no obstacle to national unity, these popular representatives have proved it practically by submitting this memorandum. This is what we wanted. In short, these two things are what we want at present in regard to the Home Rule question: Firstly, the men who make the demand must be competent and responsible men. Secondly, in a land of such divers cults and faiths, the demand must be made with one voice. Since these two requisites have been gained by our popular representatives in the Supreme Legislative Council, we must not omit to express our joy and gratitude in this regard on behalf of the Canarese-speaking population.

66. Referring to the notice served on the editor of the Express by the authorities in Behar, the Yogakshemam, of the 25th October, observes that the course taken by them was far better than the one adopted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate in Madras.

The Express and the Press Act.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Oct. 25th, 1916.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Oct. 25th, 1916.

The Malayalees and the war.

67. The Kerala Sanchari, of the 25th October, refers to the letter of Dr. S. N. Nair published in the Malayala Manorama, and exhorts Nayar youths to join the army readily and willingly, for which an opportunity has now been given to them, and thus maintain the honour and reputation of their community, as well as of their country.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 31st, 1916.

Distraint of temple properties.

68. Referring to the distraint of articles necessary for the performance of puja in temples, for default of payment of taxes, the Manorama, of the 31st October, observes that, as the Revenue officers are likely to follow the letter, and not the spirit, of the law relating to the distraint of immovable properties, the Government will do well to issue a special order that only such immovable properties as are not required for puja purposes should be distrained under such circumstances. The paper also expresses surprise that the British Government, who respect the religious sentiments of the people, should compel the authorities of Bhagavati (goddess) temples to take licenses for the possession of swords, and pay fees therefor, and calls upon the members of the Legislative Council to bring the matter to the notice of the Government.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, Oct. 23rd, 1916.

"Mr. Mitra's doubtful view of the loyalty of Indian Mussalmans".

69. The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 23rd October, referring to an article by Mr. Mitra published in the Nation, says:—The readers of this journal will probably be well acquainted with Mr. Mitra who acquired notoriety in the Mahdi Husain pamphlet case. For the information of those who are not, it will be sufficient to say that he flourished and prospered so well in this Muslim State that to-day he is able to live in England free from anxiety. He has published in a New York paper the Nation an article on the Hindu University. He has expressed his extraordinary views for and against that institution and made an unwarranted attack on the actual loyalty and devotion of the Muslim peoples of India. He says, for example, "It is within the range of possibilities for a Mussalman professor or a student to become a foreign foe just as the Turk is considered at the present moment, but Mussalman leaders hope to solve this and other intricate problems". There could be no more insidious attack on the undoubted and admitted loyalty and devotion of Indian Mussalmans. But when there are numerous brilliant examples of Muhammadan loyalty which can be cited in refutation of this charge. Mr. Mitra's bigoted strictures cannot besmirch the clean reputation of Indian Muslims.

Perhaps Mr. Mitra is not yet aware of the fact that the Muhammadan Government of Hyderabad has been foremost in rendering aid to Britain in this war. At the present moment Mussalmans are freely coming forward to the aid and assistance of the British Government not in ones and twos but in hundreds of thousands and are rendering the full meed to bravery. According to the Paisa Akhbar the Mussalman community in the Punjab has furnished a larger number of recruits than other nationalities.

It is a matter for regret that with such clear and striking examples before him Mr. Mitra was not a bit ashamed to regard, with suspicion, the fidelity and loyalty of the Muhammadans of India.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Oct. 21st, 1916.

The Jaridah's voice.

70. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 21st October writes:—"The favours of the British Government shown to Indians are so numerous that a full account and a detailed description of them would make a book! It has been indelibly impressed upon the minds of those who are familiar with the former state of affairs in India that this country has never, during any previous administration, been immune from unrest, rapine and plunder. Generally speaking, comfort and convenience were non-existent and education was declining day by day. But since the establishment of the sympathetic and just British Government all these things have changed. Even at midnight if a person were to walk along jingling his money nobody would dare to harbour designs upon it. The very names of thieves, dacoits and highwaymen have been obliterated and every one lives in comfort and safety. The benign Government has introduced many things conducive to our comfort and convenience and greatly improved arts and industries by which thousands, nay hundreds of thousands of persons have been rescued from the dark dungeon of poverty and enabled to carry on trade on their own account and to rise to the pinnacle of success. They have established schools and colleges, not only in large cities but also in villages for our intellectual benefit and physical welfare. In this way hundreds of ignorant families have been educated and qualified for high positions and exalted offices. In large and small towns they have spent crores on hospitals in the interests of our health. They have introduced telegraphic and postal communications the like of which had never been dreamt of. They have also provided good water-supply and improved systems of lighting. In a word, reforms have been introduced in every department. Our benevolent Government has spent lacs, nay crores of rupees to promote our comfort and well-being can any one forget these extraordinary favours shown to us? Emphatically, no, never! Now how are we to repay these unbounded benefits conferred upon us by our Imperial Government? Are we so ungrateful as to do nothing when the British Government is engaged in war for our safety and the welfare of our country. It should be the aim of each one of us to assist the Government in every possible way.

The editor says that the public are aware that he has been discharging his duties with the utmost sincerity and good-will and that he has often warned them against polluting their garments with the vile blot of ingratitude shirking from rendering all possible assitance to the Government. He further invites the attention of the Red Crescent and other societies as well as the leaders of the community and observes that the well-being of the subjects depends upon their being loyal to their Government and giving practical proof of their promises in this regard. This is the testing time and men should give ocular demonstration of their sincerity and follow the example of those leaders of the nation who do not hold their lives and property dear for the sake of the Government. The fact is that whatever good one does will be for the good of one's nation and country.

71. The Qaumi Report, of the 22nd October, writes:—Hindu papers and politicians are discussing the question as to whether when Sir Sivaswami Ayyar retires an Indian official or non-official should be appointed as the next Member of the Madras Government. They themselves supply their own answer to the question, and that is the member should be a Hindu!

Qaumi Report, Madras, Oct. 22nd, 1916.

"The coming Member of the Government."

This problem has been solved in the Qaumi Report over and over again, and it has been shown that Hindu patriots ought not to exaggerate their national prejudice and fanaticism. When they say that the appointment of an Indian is necessary, why should they mean by an Indian a Hindu and draw up a list of the names of Hindu candidates?

Owing to their partiality and shortsightedness this question naturally arises whether there is not a Mussalman before their mind's eye. Do they not recognise the principle that Hindus and Mussalmans are copartners and is it not fair that a Mussalman should succeed a Hindu?

In the Viceregal Executive Council Mr. Sinha was succeeded by Mr. Saiyed Ali Imam. The Bombay Executive Council has a Hindu named Chobal and the Bengal Government had Sir Saiyed Shamsul Huda, a Mussalman, who has been succeeded by a Hindu. It now remains to be seen what treatment will be meted out in Madras and Bombay when the present Hindu members vacate their seats.

But we ignore all these arguments and ask our Hindu brethren if they should suggest a Mussalman name which law is broken? Is the appointment of a Mussalman a crime? Is there not a single qualified man among Mussalmans throughout this country? In a community of seven crores of Mussalmans, cannot a single person be selected as a candidate for the office? To deny these facts would be a bold act, indeed.

One party of Hindus says that for the sake of Mussalmans an attempt should be made to find a qualified man in the Madras Presidency, but objects to the selection of an outsider because such procedure is inimical to the interests of the country. But we would remind such persons that they are cutting their own throats. A very awkward precedent exists and that is the Government of India has already selected Sir Sankaran Nayar from Madras and we have sent him. Have the Hindus laid down this principle after the departure of Sir Sankaran Nayar? So we must crave indulgence for asserting that we consider such a principle to be the bitter fruit of prejudice.

JARIDAH-I-ROZGAR, Madras, Oct. 28th, 1916.

What are newspapers?

72. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 28th October, writes:—Every one knows what is meant by newspapers whether they are published in Urdu, English, Tamil, Telugu, Persian or Arabic. Newspapers not only give the history of the past, but in reality they are the actual mouth-piece of the people expressing to the Government the sentiments and feelings of the nation and passing on the cry of the public to the ear of the Government. Our idea of public is not one or two persons, but the majority of the people of the place where the paper issues.

Now the question arises as to whether those papers which have been obliged to give security for writing doubtful articles or have been prohibited, for the time being from publishing articles of an inflammatory nature can be considered to be the voice of the people.

They cannot be, for they do not voice the unanimous feelings of the majority. Especially in India which is under the rule of our sympathetic and benign Government we can boldly assert that most of the people of this country have given and are giving ample proof of their loyalty and are leaving no stone unturned in their devotion to their King, Master and Patron, the rich by their subscriptions, the poor by joining the army, and the learned by writing inspiring articles on loyalty.

When Indian chiefs, nobles, merchants and the general public are ready to place their services at the disposal of the Government, how can we admit that inflammatory views expressed by any paper represent public opinion. It is not proper that at this critical juncture such articles should be published in any paper.

We cannot regard these papers as voicing public opinion nor can the public derive any benefit from them. Instead of advantage there is the likelihood of loss and confusion, and that the Government will become suspicious of such people. Hence it is the duty of the press to have regard to all these things and to write articles likely to benefit the country and the community. They should avoid publishing in their columns anything calculated to cause trouble in the country bearing in mind the fate of certain papers. Foolish papers have recourse to such things and in the end repent of their misdeeds when repentance is of no avail.

"Why should a sensible person do something of which he will be subsequently ashamed?"

III.—LEGISLATION.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Oct. 27th, 1916.

Adulteration of foodstuffs.

73. The Manorama, of the 27th October, heartily approves of the decision of the Government of India to pass a measure regarding the adulteration of foodstuffs, and of Mr. E. D. Maclagan's circular to the Provincial Governments, and rejoices that the Government of India also intend to put a stop to the importation of unhealthy foodstuffs from foreign countries.

BHARATA KESARI, Trivandrum, Oct. 28th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Bharata Kesari, of the 28th October, also approves of the proposed measure, and dwells upon the necessity of passing a similar one in Travancore.

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

MYSORE STAR, Mysore, Oct. 29th, 1916.

The Mysore Representative Assembly.

74. Referring to the increasing influence commanded by the Mysore Representative Assembly in the administration of the State, the Mysore Star, of the 29th October, says:—However much this may indicate the solicitude on the part of our Government to ascertain and respect public opinion on all matters of administrative interest, and however well the members of the Representative Assembly may represent the grievances of the people to the Government, this process of determining the wants and wishes of the people can never lessen the importance of the information and experience gained by the responsible officers of Government personally during their frequent tours in the respective ranges of their jurisdiction. It is very much to be regretted that of late these officers have been in the habit of ignoring the value of their tours. Some of them travel about only to show that they have not been neglecting the rules. These would do well to copy the example of our esteemed Diwan in this respect. The advantages of these periodical tours of officers are no less important than the privilege of holding a second session of the Representative Assembly every year.

The Jail administration in Mysore.

75. The Vrittanta Patrike, of the 2nd November, writes:—It seems to us extremely desirable that first offenders, when the offence is not of a grave nature, should be let off with light punishment, so as merely to create a sense of shame which may help them to turn over a new leaf for the future. In many cases, whipping is sufficient punishment. In others, the mere announcement by the court that the accused has been found guilty will be sufficient. Further, our prison houses must not be houses merely for punishing the convicts. They must equally aim at their reform. A convict who enters the jail as a wicked being must leave it a thoroughly reformed man. To this end convicts, instead of being allowed to kill their time in doing nothing, should be taught the value of honest industry. We are glad to learn that arrangements have been made of late for religious instruction in our jails with a view to sow the seeds of piety into the hearts of the delinquents. We should like to see these arrangements better organised than they are at present. Of all offences, stealing seems to be the most common. We doubt whether mere imprisonment for a time would succeed in reforming these offenders. We believe that the better course would be to increase the earning capacity of the thieves so as to help them to buy the things which they are wont to steal. Eighty-two per cent of the convicts are illiterate. The number of juvenile offenders was only 19. Although this number is admittedly too small for maintaining a reformatory for their benefit, yet we do not think that there is any real difficulty in keeping them apart from the other criminals and in helping them to return to the right path.

VRITTANTA PATRIKE, Mysore, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

The administration of Pudukkōttai.

76. After alluding to the commendable manner in which the administration is carried on in Pudukkōttai, the Keralodayam, of the 31st October, criticises the imposition of heavy taxes on the people in a small State like Pudukkōttai, in spite of there being an accumulated surplus of over twenty lakhs of rupees, but rejoices that this amount is to be utilised for the construction of a railway from Trichinopoly to Pudukkōttai. It points out that education and sanitation have not made much progress, notwithstanding the fact that more expenditure was incurred in these directions during the year under review than in the previous ones, deplores the absence of any arrangement for Ayurvedic treatment, and condemns the system of constituting temporary courts to hear second appeals, and of the annual importation of Barristers from British India to preside over them.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Oct. 31st, 1916.

ENGLISH PAPERS OWNED BY INDIANS.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

1. The following appears in New India of the 6th November: —

New India, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

"Liberty in Burma.

The Burma Criminal Investigation Department.

"An Indian gentleman, landing in Rangoon, was searched by the Criminal Investigation Department, and the following books were taken from him on the false pretence that they were proscribed: Swami Vivekananda's Biography, Lajpat Rai's United States of America, India—A Nation, and all the New India pamphlets and Home Rule pamphlets. Not one of these has been proscribed, but they are all circulating in India, as well as in free countries. The Assistant Commissioner of Police, to whom complaint was made, was courteous, and promised the return of the books, if they were not proscribed. But are Criminal Investigation Department men to be permitted to confiscate books at their own sweet will? Surely they might be furnished with a list of proscribed books, and ordered to confine their exertions to those named thereon."

(b) Courts.

2. New India, of the 10th November, writes:—"A wave of joy will pass over India at the news that the great Maharashtra leader has been liberated from his bonds by the High Court of Bombay. . . . . For the first time, so far as we know, a Judge in India has stood between the Executive and the subject, and has delivered the subject from injustice and the straining of the law against him. The tradition of British justice has been revived, and the courage of the Judge vindicates the law.

New India, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Tilak appeal case.

"So now Lokamanya Tilak is free to use his tongue for the helping of the Motherland no longer bound to the 'good behaviour' which means, from the standpoint of the Magistrate, that he must not speak the truth about India. We congratulate him, but we congratulate yet more the High Court of Bombay, for relieving us of the nightmare of inevitable condemnation under the sweep of harsh laws, designed to catch the malefactor, but so worded as to include honest speech and the expression of political convictions. We have felt up till now that we were inevitably doomed to be beaten in a Court under the present laws; Justice Bachelor has shown that a strong Judge can save the victim of a bad law. In the Bombay Presidency, at least, the lover of India may feel some hope of true deliverance being made. He will not be penalised for a word, nor ruined for a sentence, where his speech and writing are not as a whole condemnable. The judgment is a mile-stone on the road to liberty, and often will her servants point to it to show that real advance has been made."

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 10th November, says: —"The decision of the Bombay High Court reversing the order of the District Magistrate of Poona by which a security of Rs. 40,000 for good behaviour had been required from Mr. Tilak is a streak of silver lining in the cloud, in the present political conditions of the country, and will be welcomed with widespread satisfaction. . . . . The Executive Governments in all the provinces in India would do well to bear in mind, if they are intent upon doing justice, that their opinions as well as those of their Advocates-General are by no means infallible but very much the contrary. Especially is this the case where political considerations come into play. This is proved to demonstration by the results of the case againt New India decided by the

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

Madras High Court and the security case against Mr. Tilak, decided by the Bombay High Court. . . . . The learned Judge has gone minutely into the case, has given a clear analysis of the speeches and has made a pronouncement on the facts and on the law which will strike, as eminently sensible and in accordance with justice, the mind of the lawyer as well as of the general public."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Indian Patriot, of the 10th November, observes:—"Mr. Tilak's appeal has been decided by the Bombay High Court in his favour. . . . . The decision of their Lordships will not in the least surprise anybody who has read the speeches, rather the translations of them. . . . . The action of the Government in launching the proceedings is to be regretted, because it would lend itself to the suggestion that the Government cannot tolerate criticisms which the High Court finds to be unobjectionable. In the light of the High Court's decision, the observation of the Magistrate that the Government had been merciful to him in not prosecuting him was uncalled for, and it does not speak well for his appreciation of evidence that he should have been so ready to accept the accusation. There is, no doubt, considerable prejudice against Mr. Tilak, and that accounts for so sinister an interpretation being put on his speeches. It was well that the Government took action against him in a manner that permitted him to justify himself under the law before the highest tribunal. And in the interests of liberty of public discussion the decision is to be welcomed."

(d) Education.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

3. The West Coast Spectator, of the 2nd November, remarks:—

The Madras University.

"Mr. Mark Hunter is one of those who have the monopoly of seats in the Syndicate of the Madras University. He seems evidently to be under the belief that the Senate must take lying down every mandate of the Syndicate, whether resonable or unreasonable. At the last meeting of the Senate he fell foul of Messrs. Natesan and Ramanathan for vindicating their rights in the High Court—rights which were flagrantly violated by Mr. Hunter and his compatriots in the Syndicate.

"He used language and tone unworthy of his position and gave expression to sentiments which would have appropriately been in place in the governing body of the University of Berlin or the University of Petrograd. He, and his friends of the Syndicate, not only denied the Fellows a right which was theirs, but when they vindicated it, quietly turned round and fell foul of them charging them with dragging the Syndicate to Court! Such reasoning is worthy of Mr. Hunter!"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

4. The following appears in New India of the 4th November:—"The Indian history in schools.

Gokhale Society of Ahmedabad presented to the Educational Conference lately held in that town a most remarkable report, extracts from which will be found elsewhere. We draw attention to the scathing remarks made on the books on Indian history prescribed by the Education Department. To give one illustration. In the easy stories on Indian history, prescribed for the first three standards, 'The majority of the stories deal with the attempts of the rulers or chiefs on the chastity of women.' Can anything more disgraceful be imagined? Are Indian children's minds to be poisoned in this way by books written by foreigners like a Mr. Marsden, to make the love of their country impossible? Yet we are blamed for criticising the Education Department."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

5. The West Coast Spectator, of the 2nd November, writes:—"We always read with interest the administration reports of our District Boards, for being under the leading strings of the officials, who are supposed to be infallible, they are expected to show marked improvement year by year, free from those blemishes associated with the working of municipalities they make much of.

Exercising a larger jurisdiction than municipalities and having, sometimes, very large resources at their command these boards are expected to work in perfection towards the well-being of the large population committed to their charge. Some of the boards, no doubt, work in harmony and satisfactorily, but it must be admitted that the majority of them have not risen to their full stature and satisfied the expectations of the general public. To this category falls the Malabar District Board whose administration report for the last official year is now before us. . . . . The gross income from ferries was nearly seventy-five thousand rupees. We are not told how this amount was utilised, whether merged into the general funds or ear-marked for some particular purpose. During the regimè of Mr. Pinhey the income from ferries was ear-marked for the construction of bridges, but we suppose this resolve vanished the moment he left Malabar. We are glad to see the Government reviewer noticing this question. As he rightly says, judged by the income during the year under report, the collections at this rate for a long series of years should have sufficed for a considerable programme of bridge construction. . . . . Ferry services in very many cases are unsatisfactory and at times dangerous, and our thanks are due to the official reviewer for calling upon the President to take such steps as will ensure that an efficient and safe ferry service is provided. Turning to communications, the expenditure on roads amounted to Rs. 4·90 lakhs. The roads are said to be in good order, but we have reason to believe that this exists only in the imagination of the board's officials. . . . . We are still unable to commend the policy of the board in regard to the supply of medical aid. It maintained seven hospitals and twelve dispensaries, a number which is totally inadequate, regard being had to the density of the population, the extensiveness of the area and the condition of the public health. Medical aid to women was totally inadequate; the board spent in the year the magnificent sum of Rs. 3,000 on the maintenance of midwives who attended to 809 cases, which shows that hundreds of thousands of Malayalee women have had to submit themselves to the tender mercies of the primitive midwife and the consequent dangers. It is no wonder infantile mortality is on the increase. As regards sanitation, the board spent in the year under report the very magnificent sum of Rs. 5,600, this sum, we need hardly say, is a mere drop in the ocean considering the sanitary needs, and the surprise is heightened when we are told that they did not care even to utilise the full amount allotted for this purpose. . . . . It is not surprising that epidemics rarely leave Malabar, and that rural sanitation is awfully bad. The sanitary policy of our local bodies is, certainly, unintelligible to us. There was an unspent balance of about a lakh of rupees out of the provincial grant for water-supply at the end of the year. As we pointed out the other day, several of our interior villages are in urgent need of an adequate supply of good, potable water. It is to be hoped that the programme of well construction will be carried to the interior and not entirely confined to minor towns. . . . . On the whole, the working of the board, in the year under report, in all its branches of activity, except a very few, was satisfactory, on which we desire to congratulate the President and all those associated with him."

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Reformer, of the 3rd November, says:—"Owing to the numerous streams and rivers in this district which are flooded for several months in the year by heavy rains, the Malabar District Board is peculiarly fortunate as regards the income from ferries which amounts to a third of total income from that source for all the boards in the Presidency. The ferry rents in Malabar amounted nearly to three-fourths of a lakh of rupees last year, that is more than half the receipts from tolls on roads. It may be also noted that the income from tolls in Malabar is about twice the average income for a board in the Presidency under that head. If, therefore, the necessity for improving the roads and bridging the streams is greater in Malabar on account of the monsoon, the comparatively greater income from tolls and ferries justifies a comparatively heavier expenditure on roads and bridges. . . . . The net receipts for West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

1915–16 from 289 ferries were Rs. 70,832 and collections at this rate for a long series of years should have sufficed for a considerable programme of bridge-building. It does not appear that these receipts were ear-marked for any such purpose notwithstanding the soundness of the policy stated by Mr. Pinhey. . . . . We believe a programme has been already drawn up, with the bridge-schemes arranged in the order of urgency, and it is highly desirable to carry out the programme with the least possible delay. More than one important bridge can be constructed every year with the three-fourths of a lakh of rupees derived from ferries, so that most of the streams may be bridged in a few years."

The Calicut Municipality.

6. In a leader under the heading "'Lokil Sluff' in Calicut," the West Coast Spectator, of the 4th November, observes:—"Better late than never. The administration report of the Calicut Municipality has been lying on our table for some time past, and it is an interesting paper which will amply repay perusal. Along with sister institutions on this coast, the Calicut Municipality has very many disadvantages to contend against, chief among them being the half-hearted interest individual councillors take in the discharge of their duties, and the absence of an intelligent and educated public opinion to exercise an effective control over the executive and the people's representatives in the council. . . . . Even in spite of these disadvantages, natural and artificial, we have to admit that local self-government is making progress, though slow, painfully slow, and this is a matter on which we must congratulate ourselves. . . . . The educational policy of the council, though not in pace with the progressive times we live in, is, all things considered in the light of financial and other considerations, satisfactory, they having spent in the year under report a little over ten thousand rupees on the maintenance of schools. Medical relief, though not adequate, was fairly satisfactory, the Council spending on it nearly eighteen thousand rupees. . . . . On the whole, it will be seen that the Government and their officers are dissatisfied with the administration in the year under report in many departments. So far as the rate-payer is concerned, he will say that the administration is certainly an improvement on the very bad conditions that prevailed a couple of years ago; and on the principle that something is better than nothing he is satisfied with the working. But he will admit that he is not getting his money's worth, and is glad that the defects have attracted the notice of the powers-that-be. In conclusion, we trust that the self-respect of the Council will exert itself in view of the censure contained in the Government order, and that they will make an effort to show a better record of work next year. For the circumstances disclosed in the report and the Government order we regret we are unable to congratulate anybody on the year's work."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 7th, 1916.

The Municipal Hospital, Calicut.

7. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th November, remarks:—"The battle of the hospital sites is raging more and more furious, and the rate-payer looks on with bated breath. In this issue we are not going to discuss the merits and demerits of the old and new sites, but should merely like to know whether all the earnest controversialists have been at the trouble to personally inspect the new site, of which the Surgeon-General is understood to have approved.

"In all the discussions, we find this new site described as the 'Vellayil' site. This strikes us as being a clear case of giving a dog a bad name and hanging him. All Vellayil, it should be noted, is not the Vellayil, which is never named except at the end of a string of uncomplimentary adjectives. This hospital site is bounded on the east by the Coast Road and on the west by the railway line, and after you have crossed the line, it is still a bit of a tramp till you smell decaying offal in fisher backyards, or cured fish in the Government yard on the North Beach. Further discussions ought to, we think, keep these facts well in view. . . . . The objection against the proposal is more sentimental than reasonable. The Government are prepared to meet two-thirds of the expenditure, and a central dispensary is a possibility. The man in the street cannot, therefore, understand why they should object to the removal. We are afraid the opposition has not shown a strong case. If this objection is persisted in, we stand to lose a modern hospital and a medical school. The matter could be satisfactorily settled by a plebiscite, by the elected councillors calling upon their constituents for the expression of their opinion."

8. The West Coast Reformer, of the 8th November, writes:—"Two Indian workmen lost their lives in trying to rescue another workman who was overcome by sewer gas while working in an underground drain in Bombay. . . . . Motor cars on roads and machinery in the mills and the various other systems and devices of a nature that causes wonder and promotes comfort are responsible for a heavy mortality among the mortals. It is oftener that the poor and ignorant suffer than the rich and learned. The underground drainage may strike the observer as a wonderful achievement and decent device, but its risks as well as its expenses are so very considerable that the common place open drains are certainly preferable."

9. The following appears in the Indian Patriot of the 10th November:—"Collector Turing of Bellary would not receive a deputation on a topic of intense local intereset except on the condition that the members of the deputation would not keep themselves in touch with the newspapers! . . . . We sincerely hope that in his very well-intentioned efforts to propagate 'common sense' and 'good manners' among the educated subjects of His Majesty in India, Mr. Turing will not forget that a large number of people are dead against the meat market and that they are prepared to make large sacrifices, provided the market will be closed or the selling of meat prohibited therein."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

10. Referring to the remarks of the Amrita Bazaar Patrika on Dr. Bentley's Sanitation Report, New India, of the 10th November, observes:—"When we speak of the rising death-rate, the frightfully short life-period, and allege that they are due to semi-starvation, we are called seditious, we are said to be stirring up discontent, to be fomenting disaffection. The journalist is expected to prophesy smooth things, when he knows that misery and hunger may precipitate a revolution. Mrs. Annie Besant spoke on these things in Bombay and is excluded from the Presidency. She has spoken of them in New India, and she is put under security and the security is forfeited. She has written of them in India—A Nation, and the publisher is frightened into suppressing the book. The fear that she would speak of them in the Central Provinces has led to her exclusion from them.

"But are facts destroyed by the statement of them being penalised? Now a few of them are published in an official report, will the Government take heed, or will they punish Dr. Bentley for sedition? Noah was unpopular in his day, if legend speak true. His contemporaries 'knew not'. They would not know".

(f) Land Revenue and Settlement.

11. The Hindu, of the 4th November, observes:—"We publish elsewhere a communication from a correspondent signing himself as 'S.S.M.' on 'Graduates in the Revenue Department,' in which he brings to the notice of the public the treatment in the matter of promotion received by Revenue Inspectors recruited under the scheme of 1911. The complaint appears to be general that this class of officers are not given that consideration which the speeches of the spokesmen of Government in the Legislative Council, had made the public to expect. . . . . Such a state of things is in direct conflict with the object of the division into lower and upper grades effected in 1911 and the declarations made on behalf of Government. . . . . It is a pertinent question to ask whether, in pursuance of this declaration of policy, the new Revenue Inspectors, chosen for their honesty and intelligence, are being encouraged in the matter of promotions. It appears to be tearing the scheme to pieces to prefer for higher appointments persons holding qualifications inferior to those of the graduates, only on account of the total service that the former have put in. In public interests, a searching inquiry should, we think, be held into the question as to whether the promotions of these probationary Revenue Inspectors have been blocked in any considerable manner, and if so, for what reasons. . . . . The division of the services at Rs. 35 cannot, and has not, we fear, tended to improve matters very much, and public service in the subordinate grade cannot enjoy a reputation for honesty and efficiency until men for the upper service are started on Rs. 100 or thereabouts and are allowed to enter the service by the open door of competition. The question has come up before the local Legislative Council in some form or another on three occasions during the past six years, and as the purity of service and public interests require that reform, renewed efforts should clearly be made to press the matter on the attention of the Government. It will be interesting to see what the Public Services Commission have said on the question."

Survey, Settlement and Land Records.

12. The Hindu, of the 8th November, writes:—"The Government of Madras have now passed orders on all but three recommendations of the Survey and Land Records Committee. . . . . We have already pointed out that the Government, by declining to accede to the committee's recommendations regarding the immediate abolition of one of the Survey Parties, have practically reduced the advantages expected from the deliberations of the committee to nothing, for, the acceptance of the minor suggestions cannot be expected to effect much saving in the department. Orders have been deferred on the proposals of the committee in regard to the reorganisation of the Survey department, the reconstitution of Land Records staff and the preparation of a record-of-rights and the improvement of revenue registry. Not one of these proposals will tend to reduce the expenditure on either of the three departments concerned, while the carrying out of the first, involving the creation of new appointments for Europeans ignoring of the claims of Indians, will be keenly resented and condemned."

Forest reservation in Salem.

13. The Indian Patriot, of the 9th November, writes:—"The hill tribes of Salem awoke one morning to find that the unreserves which they had enjoyed 'before the Forest department was constituted', and until this day had become reserved. The line has been marked out and sign posts have been planted, and the work of reservation of three thousand two hundred acres have begun. They have lodged a protest to the Revenue Board, pointing out that what is to them valuable is reserved, and what is valueless to them and to their cattle is given over to them for panchayat management. The panchayat will have no work to do with barren ground where prickly-pear grows, useless to the cattle, and the 'Malayalees', as the hill tribes are called, look forward to very serious disabilities in the future. Their cattle cannot graze without payment; they cannot cut fuel without payment; they cannot cut wood for agricultural implements free of cost."

Promotions in the Salt and Abkāri Department.

14. The Hindu, of the 7th November, has the following:—"Promotions in the Salt and Abkāri Department present a problem of exquisite intricacy. We had occasion to draw attention in May last to the fact that Mr. F. Hodding, Inspector, was appointed as Acting Assistant Commissioner over the heads of about twenty of his brother Inspectors, and that Mr. P. T. Ramaswami Ayyar, who should have been chosen for the pot, and had already acted as Assistant Commissioner, was one of the officerss including about four other Indians, so superseded. In August last another vacancy occurred among Assistant Commissioners, and Mr. E. J. Bower, who is just below Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar, and who had been superseded along with him when Mr. Hodding was enabled by the kind Government to perform a rare feat in leap-frog, was appointed to the vacancy. It passes our comprehension how Mr. Bower had brought on himself displeasure which unfitted him for a preferment in May last and what remarkable achievements he became the author of in the few weeks that passed between his supersession and his subsequent promotion. We are now presented with another of such strange and unaccountable appointments. Mr. C. F. Sharp, who occupies, according to the latest Civil List, the fifth place in the second grade of Inspectors, has now been appointed as acting Assistant Commissioner in the place of Mr. H. B. Rendle granted leave, ignoring the claims of twenty Inspectors who were above Mr. Sharp. It may be added that Mr. Sharp himself, like Mr. Bower, was one of those that were superseded when Mr. Hodding was shot up. Of course, the Commissioner of Separate Revenue, whose business it is to send up proposals, and the Government who make the promotions, are perfectly satisfied with these appointments; but to the public, uninitiated into the inner working of the machinery of Government, they appear to be quixotic and made on a system, or lack of system, based more on the whim and personal preferences of the recommending authorities than on any intelligible and equitable plan. The Department of Salt and Abkāri appears to be specially blessed with an overdose of such capricious rules, if such they can be called, governing promotion to the grades higher than that of Inspector. In the interests of the efficiency of the service, which depends on the contentment of the officers concerned, and of good Government, the authorities would do well to inquire into the matter and present fewer of such conundrums to the amusement of the world. We do not know what the Public Services Commission have said about Indians in this particular service, but we do hope that the invidious and irritating distinction now made between Indians and Europeans will totally disappear at an early date."

(k) General.

The Governorship of Bengal.

15. The West Coast Spectator, of the 2nd November, observes:—"After all, Sir Robert Chalmers is not to succeed Lord Carmichael as Governor of Bengal, if we may believe the press communiquè issued from Darjeeling. It is said the successor will be a peer. We trust, to quote Mr. Winston Churchill, no dilapidated Duke or spent up force whom the Government want to provide for will be shot on to India. Lord Carmicheal was specially selected, because a statesman was found an absolute necessity in Bengal. This necessity has not yet vanished." WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

The Government of the Central Provinces and Mrs. Besant.

16. The West Coast Reformer, of the 3rd November, states:—"Mrs. Besant has been prohibited from entering or residing in the Central Provinces and Berar just as she has been excluded from the Presidency of Bombay. It appears she had intended to visit Amroati to deliver a lecture on theosophy, but it must have been the fear of her political propaganda that has induced the Chief Commissioner to issue this order. It is surprising that the Defence of India Act is being used against an advocate of a political movement which the Government have admitted to be unobjectionable." WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 4th November, writes:—"The members of the Theosophical Society held yesterday a meeting at Adyar and passed a resolution protesting against the order of the Central Provinces and Berar Government prohibiting Mrs. Besant under the Defence of India Act from going to Berar and the Central Provinces. Mrs. Besant as President of the Theosophical Society was to have attended the Theosophical Conference to be held at Amroati, and the Local Government's order has debarred her from doing so. Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar who presided at the meeting at Adyar HINDU, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

has clearly pointed out that the prohibitory order is an unjustifiable one. It is quite natural and proper that the theosophists in the country should resent the order as arbitrary and unjust. To theosophists as well as to non-theosophists, the issue raised by the order is of much public importance. It seems to us that the order is a distinct violation in spirit of the attitude of religious neutrality and non-interference with the religious beliefs and usages of the people which was enjoined by Queen Victoria upon the servants of the British Government in this country, in her gracious Proclamation in the year 1858. . . . . The one prominent virtue of British administration in this country is its acting in conformity with the law, and with the principles of justice and fair-play. We fear that the governing powers in this country are now-a-days too often impelled by the expediencies of the moment, and do not pay sufficient regard to the vital factors and needs. . . . . We cannot but think that there is a grave want of statesmanship in these acts."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 4th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 4th November, says:—"It is with painful surprise we hear that the Central Provinces administration has prohibited Mrs. Besant from entering its territory. Mrs. Besant was to go to Amraoti to preside over a purely non-political function, and it is rather surprising that Sir Benjamin Robertson should have availed himself of a purely war measure like the Defence Act to keep Mrs. Besant out of his territory. Mrs. Besant is no red-hot anarchist, neither is she a revolutionary. Her loyalty is unquestioned, and there is no stauncher advocate of British rule and good government than that old lady.

"In this connection, the Defence of India Act has been condemned as illegal and ultra vires by no less an authority than Lord Loreburn, ex-Lord High Chancellor of England. We would very much desire that Mrs. Besant should test its legality carrying it, if needs be, to the highest judicial tribunal in the empire. As this is a matter of great importance we would suggest the desirability of raising a public fund for the defence of Mrs. Besant."

Malabar Herald, British Cochin, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 4th November, remarks:—"Another bolt from the blue has fallen on that unfortunate lady Mrs. Besant, as she is prohibited by a Government order from entering the Central Provinces and Berar. Like the Central Powers, she is being gradually hemmed in, and let us hope that she will finally receive a crown as a political martyr."

New India, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The following appears in New India of the 6th November:—

"Dr. Gour and Mrs. Besant.

"We are deeply grateful to Dr. Gour for his bold defence of Mrs. Annie Besant. He declared that the whole of India looked on her as a martyr; she was acclaimed as the heroic defender of the liberty of the press and action; and India owed her a deep debt of gratitude for the gallant fights she was putting up against reactionary measures. It is pleasant to hear so whole-hearted and outspoken a declaration, one that history will endorse. Dr. Joshi revealed the fact, which we did not know, that the local officials had been apprised of the fact that Mrs. Besant had not been invited to speak on politics. It is clear, as we surmised, that the blow was struck at religious liberty, and that politicians of every faith are menaced as to the expression of their religious beliefs."

South Indian Mail, Madura, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The South Indian Mail, for the week ending 6th November, observes:—"The Central Provinces Governments' order under the Defence of India Act prohibiting Mrs. Besant to enter, reside or remain in the Central Provinces and Berar is another bolt from the blue. When the people have not yet recovered from the shock caused by the Bombay Government order, the present one has aggravated the situation. . . . . By this the Government have violated the religious neutrality proclaimed by Her Majesty the Empress Victoria, the Good, because the members of the Theosophical Conference have been deprived of the benefits that wolud result in their accredited head of the Theosophical Societies presiding over the function.

If the Government had an intention that Mrs. Besant should not take part in the political conference, they might have as well resorted to other weapons in their hands.

"If Mrs. Besant is a person that acts in a way prejudicial to the public safety then the foremost and the first government to initiate an action against her under this Act must be the Madras Government, under whose jurisdiction she has been residing and has all her political and other activities. As long as this local Government have not yet found any reason to apply the Defence of India Act against her the other distant Governments have not even an idea of justification for taking such action against Mrs. Besant whose staunch loyalty to the throne, no arch enemy of hers can question.

"It is most painful and regrettable to find that when the Indians are aspiring for enlarged freedom, even the little liberty they have should be encroached upon by the wrong application of the Press Act and the Defence of India Act in cases not intended by the Legislature. I urge upon the leading public associations all over India to call for timely meetings of protest as the question involved is one of alarming magnitude. I also call the attention of the local associations".

New India, of the 7th November, observes:—"We owe Sir Benjamin Robertson much gratitude for the effective help he has given to the Home Rule propaganda in his Provinces by his order of exclusion against Mrs. Annie Besant. He has evoked more enthusiasm for her than would have been evoked by her peaceable visit, and her substitute, Mr. B. P. Wadia, had so huge an audience that his lecture on Home Rule had to be delivered in the open air, and the pictures of Mrs. Besant and Mr. Tilak presided over the meeting. If only we could draw, we would draw a cartoon of the altar of the motherland, heaped with fuel just set alight, and the Governments of Madras, Bombay and the Central Provinces blowing it up with bellows. For that is exactly what they are doing. We should have preferred to see the fire burn up more quietly and steadily, but we have no control over the blowers, and the high gods may find them useful for the swifter effectuation of their purposes."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 7th, 1916.

17. In New India of the 4th November, Mrs. Besant writes:—"The Madras Times objects to my dual personality as President of the Theosophical Society and President of the Home Rule League, and says, with reference to the Central Provinces exclusion order—

The Theosophical Society and politics.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

> If Mrs. Besant, the President of the Theosophical Society, were to go to the Central Provinces to address a theosophical meeting, there is no knowing that Mrs. Besant, the President of the Home Rule League, would not be persuaded to take the opportunity of addressing another meeting in the same Provinces; and it is this, we take it, that the Chief Commissioner desires to prevent.

"If so, why did not the Chief Commissioner say so? But why should I not speak as President of the Home Rule League, if I were invited to do so? The Home Rule League is a constitutional body; it is not proscribed. On the contrary, both the Bombay and Madras Governments have declared that the advocacy of Home Rule is legitimate. In the late Press Act case, not one of the very large number of articles I have written on Home Rule was attacked, nor have the many pamphlets I have written, nor has any lecture of mine on Home Rule, been prosecuted. The Government has carefully avoided touching one of all these. Then why should I, as President of the Home Rule League, be excluded from the Central Provinces and Berar, under the false pretence that I am acting in a way 'prejudicial to public safety'? Sir Benjamin Robertson shelters himself under this pretence, but dares not openly say that he will not allow a Home Rule lecture in his territory. Will he be consistent, and break up the political conference and forbid a Home Rule resolution? Why should he single me out alone for proscription, while all the others are left free? Lord Willingdon's example in this is not a noble one to follow, for while he excluded me, he did not venture to exclude Mr. Gandhi, Mr. Srinivasa Sastri, Mr. Jinnah, and many others, who spoke out as courageously as I have done. Would it not be more decent at least to let me speak, and then to prosecute me if I talked sedition? The method adopted brings the Government, as defined by Mr. Justice Ayling, into 'hatred and contempt,' for it is not straightforward nor honest on the part of Sir Benjamin Robertson to punish me for a thing he pretends I have done, while really punishing me for another, which is not punishable by law. . . . . But apart from all this, as a theosophist, I cannot separate religion and life. In India the greatest spiritual teachers, the Rishis themselves, have mingled in political life; seeking the welfare of the world was the way to liberation of our forefathers, and I humbly try to follow in their steps. I cannot, as a true theosophist, see unmoved the ghastly poverty of India, the millions who have not even one full meal a day, the 78 per cent of ill-nourished children among the poor; I cannot see unmoved the even more terrible ignorance, which makes the poverty habitual and look on while these, my brethren, are hungry and thirsty, are sick and dying from their misery. I am no Christian, but I love the Christ, and I see in these emaciated forms, in these want-stricken faces, in these hungry babes, generated by hungry fathers and born from hungry mothers, I see in these Shri Krishna and the Christ, and I serve the Holy Ones in serving these. . . . . It is idle to tell me that the present state of things cannot be mended, and that a land once the richest upon earth cannot even feed its population. It is not enough to seek to relieve sufferings, when their causes can be removed. It is not enough to feed and teach a few, when millions are in want. It is not enough to staunch the wound, when wounding can be prevented. It is not charity that India wants, but JUSTICE. . . . . Because I believe in brotherhood, in justice, in righteousness, in liberty, in the great ideals which I have followed and taught for more than forty years, I am a Home Ruler; and because others believe that with my help they can win Home Rule, I am President of the Home Rule League. And as God is my witness, I will teach the necessity and practicability of Home Rule for this sacred land, the land of the Rishis and the Devas, the land of glorious history and of splendid religion, so long as liberty is left me to write and speak, though the circle be narrowing round me. While I can write I will write; while I can speak I will speak; and when that liberty is denied me, when my property is confiscated and my person is in bonds, then my enforced silence shall speak more loudly than my tongue, then my prison shall be an inspiration to action, and if need be my death shall win that which was not won by my life. For God is ever with His own in the darkness as in the light, and to those who are willing to renounce all, He gives all when the time is ripe."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The emigration enquiry.

18. Referring to the comments of the Ceylonese on the treatment of coolies on Ceylon estates, New India, of the 4th November, says:—"Now that the Government is sending two people to investigate the condition of the coolies in Ceylon the following facts will be worthy of attention. . . . . First of all we must request the Government servants, who are going to these places, closely to investigate the existing state of things. Perhaps the first question should be: 'Is there sufficient medical provision for the estate coolies?' . . . . We would urge the Madras Government and the Imperial Government to give heed to these charges and complaints. Every Government have a duty laid upon them to see that the people over whom they rule are not obliged to pass their lives in misery. No Government can allow themselves to become, directly or indirectly, an agent through whom people are taken from liberty to a life of semi-slavery. . . . . We in India must take up the question and agitate till the Governments of Madras and India listen to us. The latter live a long way off, it is true, and it is difficult to get at them; but still we may make our voice strong and powerful enough to ascend the hills of Simla or reach the plain of Delhi. Then the labour question will be solved."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Department of Industries.

19. The Indian Patriot, of the 4th November, writes:—"Madras, of all presidencies in India, has the unique distinction of having had the first Department of Industries; other presidencies followed the example of Madras in establishing a similar department. Reviewing the report of the Director of Industries on his operations during last year, the Government of Madras is able 'to note the good work done by the Department of Industries during the year under difficult conditions.' It is, however, doubtful whether the public would feel the same degree of satisfaction at the work done, or rather attempted to be done. . . . . The officials who were appointed to work up various industries have one by one left for the war, leaving the pencils that would not write and the sodawater bottles that would break as lasting monuments of their efforts. Mr. Tressler has also bid good-bye to the department and gone to the Military Department, where, we hope, he will distinguish himself, as much as a soldier as a despatch writer. He seems to have been, in the midst of his multifarious duties, given to reading fairy tales. . . . . If he would give us equally interesting accounts of the war, in which he is taking a personal part, he will distinguish himself. However much the Government may thank him, Mr. Tressler leaves us without causing in us a sigh. The Indian patriot who hankers for industrial life can never forgive the expert who consoled us by pointing to the resumption of steamer service between France and India, when we were eager to develop the oil industry.

"We all know enough of the dyeing department and the work of the expert. The war stopped the import of dye-stuffs into India, and the expert found he had no work. There was no dye for the weaver, and that was exactly the time when our dyeing expert found he had no work to do and transformed himself into a leather expert. . . . . For the present, therefore, we have no dyeing industry. The leather trade school has not any better account to give.

"The session started with six students and it had only just begun when the Principal was called away on active service. Two of the six students decided to postpone their course until the Leather Expert's return from active service. One other student seems to have joined the class under the impression that attendance would constitute an easy path to Government employment. When his mind was disabused on this point his attendance ceased."

20. The Western Star, of the 4th November, remarks:—"In view of the opinions and observations which we expressed in a leading article in our issue of the 26th ultimo regarding the appointment of a successor to Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar who will retire from the post of Indian Member of the Madras Executive Council early next year, it is perhaps necessary that we should offer a few further remarks in the light of the deliberate opinion expressed the other day by a correspondent of a Madras daily to the effect that gentlemen who have served as Diwans in Native States will not make good and successful Executive Councillors. . . . . Those who are acquainted with the political and administrative history of many of our leading Native States for very many years past will not need to be told, we think, that their affairs have been most efficiently and progressively administered in those very period when their Diwanships have been filled by men, whose training and experience had all been acquired under British Indian conditions. . . . . The correspondent, whose observations we are noticing, goes on to say that, having tasted the sweets of autocratic power when bossing in the Native States, many of these Diwans get swelled heads and adopt high-handed and arbitrary methods. Of course, we must confess that we do not know what States and what autocrats and bosses this correspondent is alluding to, but if our readers will turn again to the history, in recent years, of some of the best administered among our Native States, they will find that the Diwanships in question have been neither sinecures for British Indian failures, nor opportunities for the exercise of autocracy and high-handedness. . . . . Without doubt, even in the best administered States, where liberal principles are recognised and liberal ideals are pursued, isolated acts of high-handedness may be perpetrated, but can it be seriously denied that similar isolated instances occur in British India, in spite of the more highly specialised and constitutional character of its administrative system? . . . . So far as we ourselves are concerned, we have not cared, in this discussion about who should succeed Sir Sivaswami Ayyar, to go in for the strategy of beating about the bush. We have frankly and honestly named the one who, in our opinion, exceptionally fitted, in all respects, for the prospective vacancy, and should the selection we have ventured to make be also to one which will commend itself to the Paramount Government, we consider that that would be in the best interests of the Presidency and of the reforms which have admitted Indians into the inner circle of the Government.

COCHIN ARGUS, British Cochin, Nov. 4th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Cochin Argus, for the week ending 4th November, says:—"Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar's retirement, very early next year, is furnishing plenty of matter for a heated controversy as regards his probable successor and the factors and conditions which should determine the latter's selection. Since its creation, the Indian seat in the Executive Council of the Governor of Madras has now been thrice filled, and, if no account is to be taken of certain Law appointments which Sir Sivaswami Ayyar had held under the Crown, the patronage of the Government may be said to have been bestowed twice consecutively on a non-official. Consequently, one section of those who are maintaining the present vigorous, if not always edifying controversy, are strongly in favour of the next innings going to an official. . . . . If, however, the main controversy resolves itself into a question of official or non official, there are not wanting interesting side issues, that are being discussed quite as excitedly, and, indeed, the controversy, taken as a whole, is only too plain an indication that, however loud the professions of political unity raised by the educated classes of the country might be, sectional differences and the class or caste spirit still remain among the most powerful under-currents of Indian public life. . . . . We have by no means drawn the attention of our readers to all the many lines along which the great controversy has been carried, but we have made it abundantly clear, we believe, that the task of finding a suitable successor to Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar is bound to prove bewildering, if those who have to discharge it have to take seriously into account all the very far from harmonious and reconcilable factors and conditions which the controversy has thrown up. . . . . The Indian Member is not in the Council as a figurehead, on which the proletariat could gaze with pride and admiration. He is there as the pioneer in the field of autonomy towards which British rule is cautiously but steadily leading India, and he is there also to lend a hand in consolidating the path already trodden, so that those who come after him may travel with less difficulty and with greater confidence, and in view of this, he should necessarily be fully qualified for the burden he is called upon to bear. The Government's clear duty, therefore, will be to put aside all considerations which do not really count and to base its selection on the essential test of merit and efficiency."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The Defence of India Act.

21. New India, of the 6th November, writes:—"The Behar and Orissa Local Government have set a good example as to the proper use of the Defence of India Act. They state that having 'received reliable information that Moulana Abulkalam Azad, late editor of Al Hilal, has been engaged in treasonable communication with the King's enemies' they have passed an order under the Act 'placing restrictions on his movements and correspondence'. How great is the contrast presented by this action and that taken by the Governments of Bombay, the Central Provinces and Berar against Mrs. Besant. The latter make a vague and unsubstantiated charge of the most damaging character—save that no one believes it—against a loyal and law-abiding subject of the Crown. The former openly state the charge, and, even if it be shown later to be mistaken, no one can blame the Government, for it is using the Act for the purpose for which it was intended. Moreover, the charge is clear and definite, and, if false, can be refuted."

22. New India, of the 6th November, remarks:—"The Bankipur Express has escaped from the jaws of the lion, the orders served on it under the Indian Press Act having been withdrawn. We congratulate our contemporary on living under a more liberal Government than that of Madras. Lord Pentland was once a Radical. We do not know whether he has changed his political creed, or if he keeps his Radicalism strictly for 'Home' consumption."

NEW INDIA, Madras. Nov. 6th, 1916.

The Express and the Indian Press Act.

New India, of the 8th November, has the following:—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 8th, 1916.

"Two remarkable protests.

"The protests of Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyar and of Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Ayyar against the order of the Central Provinces and Berar Chief Commissioner, excluding Mrs. Annie Besant from his territories, should give the local Governments pause. Two men, known all over India for their deep religious feelings as well as for their active political work, protest against the danger of the step so rashly taken. The Theosophical Society with its organisation in every civilised country will be shocked at such an infringement of religious liberty. Though Mrs. Besant has, from regard to the empire, refrained from calling on any allied or neutral country for help, they will all hear of what has been done. . . . . In America, where everything to win good opinion has been done by English statesmen, lavishing interviews, Sir Benjamin Robertson's action will give rise to bitter feeling and will help the hyphenated Americans. Here in India it has aroused a storm of feeling in his own Provinces, in the political even more than in the theosophical camp, and instead of weakening Mrs. Besant it has immensely strengthened her in the public mind. Rulers may affect to despise popular opinion, but in the long run they are compelled to bow to it. Every new severity against her will only make the tide run higher. The days when coercion cowed are past."

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 8th November, says:—"We deeply regret to see that, under the threat of the imposition of security, the Express has apologised and has been let off. It places one more difficulty in the way of braver papers, and encourages the bureaucracy to counsel the Government to resort to repression."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 8th, 1916.

23. New India, of the 6th November, observes:—"The semi-official statement that the Government of India is considering the question of extending chinchona plantations in this country is of very melancholy interest to Indians. It shows that the Government, as at present advised by its sanitary and medical experts, is apprehending a shortage in the supply of quinine to malaria patients; in other words, it is fearing a further spread of malaria in the country. . . . . Few foreign countries are now in a mood to tolerate malaria. The United States and Italy, in whose dominions it was committing havoc, have now practically banished it; and though it may be lurking in some other countries, we do not think the expectation of a demand from them has induced the Government to think of extending the plantations. . . . . A greater disaster than the spread of malaria cannot be thought of. Already it is doing immense harm in several Provinces. Fertile lands are becoming too insanitary to live in; and villages are being deserted in Bengal and some other tracts in Northern India, because of malaria. Apart from it, the productive capacity of a person suffering from malaria is very little; and a nation, caught in the grips of that dire disease, cannot hope to be ever industrially great. . . . . That being the case, if the Government of India experts feel the probability of its further spread, we feel that the whole sanitary policy of the Government ought to be drastically reorganised on an efficient basis.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

Malaria in India.

"Unhappily for this country, our Government have yet to learn the advantage of a preventive policy in fighting avoidable diseases. . . . . It is, for instance, a long time since the harmfulness of burrow-pits along railway lines was recognised; but still the railway authorities are given full freedom to keep as many stagnant pools as they may be pleased to create. May we humbly approach the Government of India with a request to consider whether it is not something more than wasteful to permit the Railway Companies to extend malaria, and then to spend vast sums of money in extending the chinchona plantations? The whole sanitary policy of the authorities in this respect is radically unsound; and it has been a wonder to us how its rottenness does not make itself felt by them."

New India, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The Theosophical Society of England and Wales and Mrs. Besant.

24. In commenting on the resolution of the National Council of the Theosophical Society in England and Wales approving of Mrs. Besant's efforts to maintain the free platform of the society, New India, of the 6th November, says:—"Accustomed to judge things from the standpoint of righteousness and justice, they (English theosophists) will not think that the policy, headlined as 'Startling disclosures' when carried out in Germany, is justifiable when applied to India. Germany did not even arrest, nor in any way limit the liberty of the Socialist Liebknecht, until, addressing a huge crowd of semi-starving people, he called on them, in the most violent language, to resort to physical force. Here a President of a religious society is prevented from delivering lectures to a religious gathering on purely religious subjects. We may be silenced in India, but Indian autocrats cannot silence theosophists in England. When the free religious platform is interfered with, it is the plain duty of theosophists to defend it, and to take in England effective means to change the form of Government which revives religious persecution. No step more 'prejudicial to public safety' could have been taken in India, the land, above all others, where religion is the strongest motive power."

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 7th, 1916.

Floods in the moffussil.

25. The Hindu, of the 7th November, has the following:—"Unprecedented floods have wrought great havoc in parts of Salem, Guntūr, Kurnool and other districts, and many people belonging to the poorer classes have been rendered helpless and homeless. From the harrowing description of the damage done by the floods given by our correspondents in these places, one can judge of the serious losses to which people in those parts have been put, and the sufferings they are undergoing. Committees have been formed in most of the affected centres and officials and non-officials are showing commendable zeal in relieving distress. We would, however, urge the Government to make urgent inquiries into the condition of the people in these places and extend without delay liberal facilities to the homeless by relaxing the rules governing, for instance, the disposal of forest produce, grant of sites, etc. There is, of course, much that the public can do; but the Government can do more, and we trust that this will be done expeditiously."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 7th, 1916.

The proposed partition of the Malabar district.

26. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th November, observes:—"Even the unbending Civilian bows low before the King Demos. We desire to congratulate the Collector of Malabar on his announcement that he welcomes criticisms on the proposed partition of Malabar and that he would forward to Government any representations that might be made. We have here an assurance that nothing would be carried behind the back of the people, and that the Government are prepared to respect popular susceptibilities. So far the consensus of opinion is against the proposal. We hope to deal with the matter at length later on.

"In the meantime, we must state that no valid reason has, as yet, been put forward for the bifurcation. There is and must be opposition which might be characterised as sentimental, but, according to Mr. Gladstone, sentiment most largely influence politics. We do not think it is politic to divide a people tied together by community of blood, language and customs. Nothing, also, has occurred to show that the administration of Malabar has become unwieldy."

27. The West Coast Spectator, of the 7th November, states :—"The Madras Government seems to have decided to place a Civilian on special duty in connection with industrial enquiries. Why a Civilian; there is, of course, no subject under the sun he is not acquainted with. But would it not be better to give the enquiry to one who is in actual and close touch with our industries? Verily, they are carrying their faith in the omniscience of the Civilian too far."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 7th, 1916.

Industrial enquiries.

28. In a leader under this heading, the Hindu, of the 8th November, remarks:—"His Excellency Lord Pentland has excelled his previous record in the matter of making nominations of non-official members to the Legislative Council by the appointment he has made yesterday. The announcement appears in this week's Fort St. George Gazette that the Kumara Raja of Bobbili has been nominated a non-official member. . . . . Deeply disappointing as Lord Pentland's administration has been in various aspects, the worst feature of it is the disregard of public opinion and of the sentiments of the educated section of the community which we have had to notice from time to time. . . . . The Council is divided into two sections, viz., official members and the non-official members. The latter are composed of those returned by the process of election, and in regard to interest which are deemed incapable of returning elected representatives the Governor has been given the power to nominate suitable persons. It is his manifest duty to so exercise his choice as to fulfil the purpose for which the power has been conferred upon him. In most of the nominations of non-official members which Lord Pentland has made to the present Council, we feel bound to say that there has been an egregious failure in this respect, although repeated representations have been made to His Excellency of the necessity of making just and suitable nominations. . . . . Lord Pentland's nominations seem to be such as whether intentionally or net, to make it difficult for the nominated non-official members to combine with the elected members, and to make the non-official majority in the Legislative Council an illusory and unattainable one for practical purposes."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 8th, 1916.

Lord Pentland's nominations.

29. New India, of the 9th November, has the following :—

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 9th, 1916.

"A new pillar of empire.

"Thus the Times names the new school of Oriental Studies in London. . . . . The plan of it is somewhat peculiar. It is meant, says the Times, to 'furnish an opportunity for Englishmen about to engage in "governing or garrisoning" the Oriental and African parts of the Empire' to learn something about the peoples they are going to govern, or whose countries they are going to garrison—charming word. Its second object, specially urgent, says the Times, is to train those going to the governed or garrisoned countries 'for commercial purposes,' and thirdly to offer a meeting-ground for the scholars of the east of all nationalities.

The London School of Oriental Studies.

"The committee making the appeal for funds includes Lord Curzon, Lord Cromer and Sir John Hewett—ominous names for India. Mr. Chamberlain is on it for his wide and deep knowledge of the east. . . . . The Imperial Institue is, we suppos, another 'pillar of empire'; its Indian committee has just 'been charged by the Secretary for India with an enquiry into the possibility of employing the raw materials of India industrially and commercially within the empire to a greater extent than hitherto'. We regard this enquiry with deep alarm, for the final blow will be struck at Indian prosperity if she is to be depleted of her natural resources even more than hitherto, and is to turn into an empire ploughman and miner. . . . . Can anything place a country in a more hopeless condition than the proposed draining away of the natural, God-given resources on which her future wealth and prosperity depend? The one effort of the Government of India at the present time should be the development of India's resources for India's enrichment, so that she may become again the great manufacturing country which she was before the East India Company began turning her into a settlement for the produce and export of raw materials. Ominous are the words already spoken by witnesses in the Industries Commission, on the non-encouragement of industries whose development would injure 'Home Industries,' i.e., some foreign industries. If India be really governed in her own interests, now is the time to prove it. Let the Government establish industries for working up India's raw materials in India now; for if they are scattered over the empire and this new 'drain' be definitely established, there will be a number of new vested interests created, against which India will clamour in vain"

United India and Native States, Madras, Nov. 9th, 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. Y. Chintamani on Home Rule for India.

30. United India and Native States, for the week ending 9th November, remarks:—"The Hon'ble Mr. C. Y. Chintamani's presidential address at the United Provinces Conference, and especially that portion of it dealing with the progress made by the Indian States, was most interesting. He dealt with the charge often levelled against Indians that they are unfit to undertake administrative responsibilities and attempted to refute it by alluding to the advance made in the Native States where the administrative machinery in all grades is manned by Indians, and proceeded to point out that a nation which produces successful administrators can scarcely be said to be lacking in 'the capacity and character to sustain the responsibilities of Government.' . . . . To the charge that Indians have yet to establish their fitness for the immediate introduction of the most advanced form of Home Rule it is no answer to say that the Native States are not weltering in anarchy and misrule. . . . . It may safely be asserted that the success attained in the Native States is as much due to the zeal and devotion of the Princes and their advisers as to the wholesome influence exerted by the Government of India, and we think we are stating a bare truth when we say that the advance made is due not a little to that desire to avert that awful fate attendant on a welter of misrule and anarchy —the danger of being wiped out of existence by the Government of India who in the last resort are responsible for the progress of the subjects of Native States as of the people placed under their direct care. . . . . We are no opponents of Home Rule as we have taken care to explain so often; nevertheless we are constrained to remark that if Englishmen in a fit of generosity withdraw themselves from the administration of the country to-day the result will be a welter of misrule and anarchy. . . . . Mr. Chintamani has a reputation for practicality and level-headedness and it is with considerable surprise that we came across his declamatory shibboleths almost resembling the clap-trap oratory of the irresponsible demagogue."

New India, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

India and the empire.

31. In a leader under the heading "Reconstruction 'now'" commenting on an article in the Daily Mail (Overseas Edition) on the future of the empire after the war, New India, of the 10th November, says:—"We are rapidly learning in this country sharply to differentiate between the Bureaucracy that rules and the Democracy of Great Britain from which with the acquiescence of India, the power proceeds. We know that the Bureaucracy clings to the power delegated to it by the representatives of the people of Britain, but we know, too, that an appeal to the justice of Great Britain will not pass unheeded. And we believe that those who have given power to the Bureaucracy will restore it to the Indian people when the safety of the empire is finally assured by the complete triumph of the forces of liberty.

"India has sacrificed no less than have other integral parts of the Empire for the sake of liberty, but it would be a mockery of her sacrifice to deny to her individually that freedom which she has helped to win for the smaller nationalities of Europe, as well as for the democratic principle against the principle of class tyranny. A nation which has shed its blood for the sake of justice has deserved that justice shall be meted out to it, and in the grateful recognition of this fact by the people of Great Britain will lie the foundation of an imperishable tie between India and the British nation. . . . .

Clearly the red-herring, trailed across the path of the Indian reformer in the shape of 'leave everything until after the war,' has been entirely unable to divert even the self-governing dominions from realising that, to have a chance of permanant success after the war, reconstruction must begin now. And if this be true for countries already enjoying the benefits of responsible Government, how much truer must it not be of a country suffering under the yoke of a foreign bureaucracy and impeded at every effort to express freely its needs.

"We may congratulate ourselves that the demand for Home Rule is being persistently pressed in spite of all discouragement and official frowns, for we must not allow the Mother country, as Britain is called—the name would in many ways be more appropriate to India—to imagine that India needs less than her more fortunate partners in the empire, whose safety she is helping to secure."

IV.—Native States.

Raffles in Cochin State.

32. The West Coast Reformer, of the 5th November, writes:—"We should strongly deprecate the launching of another raffle which the Cochin Darbar is reported to have sanctioned. . . . . All lotteries are obnoxious to public policy; and this method of trading on the greed and speculation of the public ought not to be sanctioned by a responsible Government so frequently . . . . Any unpopular scheme could be satisfactorily financed with the aid of a public lottery, and it is not easy to draw a line where this policy should stop. It was, perhaps, an evil day when the Cochin Darbar decided on the first, and it will be certainly worse if they are going to continue the raffle policy further on."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Nov. 5th, 1916.

The Indian Chiefs' Conference.

33. The Hindu, of the 6th November, states:—"The Indian Chiefs' Conference concluded its proceedings on the 3rd instant. It commenced with a speech by His Excellency the Viceroy and a reply by His Highness the Gaekwar, and it terminated with a speech from the latter giving a brief account of the proceedings and a speech in reply by the Viceroy. Not much business of importance seems to have been transacted at the conference, and the matters discussed related to questions of a civil nature arising between the States themselves and in their relations with the Government of India. . . . . The Indian Chiefs' Conference being the first of its kind held this year, is in an amorphous stage. The Gaekwar expressed the desire of the Princes that it should be held next year also and said that they cherished the hope which the Viceroy had held out that 'in the fulness of time some constitutional assembly may grow out of these conferences which will take its appropriate place in the Government of our mighty empire.' Lord Chelmsford said in reply that he shared their opinion as to the value of the conference and hoped to invite the Princes to a similar conference next year, and proceeded to observe, 'but I would beg you to give time to development and growth, and the motto I would ask you to place before yourselves is festina lente, make haste slowly.' Apart from what time may bring forth, we think the meeting together of the important Indian Princes throughout the country cannot but be productive of good in leading to a mutual exchange of ideas regarding their immense responsibilities towards the people committed to their care and towards the welfare of their motherland. It cannot but bring into strong relief those Princes who take an abiding, personal and vivid interest in their duties, and will cast into the shade those who are content to govern by deputy, and inflict upon their subjects, the evils of absentee rulership."

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The Additional Head Sirkar Vakil, Travancore.

34. In a leader on this subject, the Conch, for the week ending 8th November, says:—"This office has been created as a temporary measure about two years ago. . . . . It will be remembered that this appointment had not met with the public approval at the time of its creation. The public dissatisfaction has been evinced by the people's representatives in the Sri Mulam Popular Assembly too on more occasions than one. It cannot be denied that the financial condition of the State can hardly justify such a new appointment. The representatives of the people had questioned the appointment in all its aspects. All their objections still remain unanswered and the appointment unjustified to this day. . . . . Whatever may have been the nature of the justification for the creation of this appointment and its extension in the past, we have now to consider whether it is worth while to continue its existence any further. Both for its creation, and for its extension, the question of absence of necessity applies with equal force. . . . . Next let us look at the financial aspect of the matter. The officer and the establishment, if we understand it correctly, together cost Rs. 666, with a contingency of about at least the amount which may bring the figure to Rs. 700. This gives a total of Rs. 8,400 a year. This is certainly too high a figure for an appointment which is quite unnecessary. The Government can utilise this amount to meet the really urgent needs of the country. For these reasons, we think that a special officer for legislation was unnecessary, that even if it was necessary, the appointment has been protracted for an unnecessary long time, and even during the period that the office has been permitted to exist, it has not done full justice to the duties expected of it. This costly office ought to have been done away with long, long ago. Its existence now is, therefore, unjustifiable, and its continuance will absolutely be untenable."

Conch, Trivandrum, Nov. 8th, 1916.

CONCH, Trivandrum, Nov. 8th, 1916.

35. The Conch, for the week ending 8th November, has the following :—

The Nayar Brigade, Travancore.

"Major H. C. Oakes, the popular Commandant of the Nayar Brigade, handed over his command on the 2nd instant to Lieutenant-Colonel R. DeL. Faunce who arrived here from Bangalore the previous evening. Major Oakes of the 28th Light Cavalry was in command of the Brigade and Body Guard for just over three years and during his tenure of office, his administration of the Military Forces of His Highness the Maharaja was characterised by energy and effiicency. Being gifted with those rare qualities which captivate the minds of those with whom he comes in contact, Major Oakes knew how to combine administrative efficiency and martial discipline with sympathy and kindness, and he has acquired the reputation of being one of the most popular Commandants, that ever held command of His Highness' Nayar Brigade. On account of his rare qualities of head and heart, he was held in the highest esteem and regard by His Highness' Government. Socially, himself and his amiable lady were most genial of hosts and they were persona grata with the Trivandrum society. True to the best instincts of his race and to that intense patriotism so characteristic of an Englishman, he was trying ever since the Great War broke out to have his services transferred to some sphere of activity where he could make himself more useful to his King and the Empire. His endeavours have at last apparently been crowned with success, and there is every likelihood of his wishes being gratified. We wish the cause that has drawn him and others like him away to the front an early triumph."

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

36. The Kistnapatrika, of the 28th October, says:—The memorandum, submitted by nineteen members of the Imperial Legislative Council, recommends that in the Executive Councils of the Government of India and the Local Governments, half the members should be Indians. Although this may improve the present situation, it will not give us entire satisfaction. Ministers administering Native States manifest greater capacity and take a broader outlook of things than the present Indian members of Executive Councils. Are these ministers more learned and talented than the Indian Council members? No. The latter have not the freedom, the facilities and the opportunities enjoyed by the former; and this disables them from showing their political skill to advantage. Granting that the Indian members form one half of an Executive Council, the President who is a Governor will ordinarily side with the European members, and the proposals of the Indian members will be lost. The object of the signatories to the memorandum would be gained if they asked for a majority of Indian members in the Executive Councils. The Philippine Islands, to which America granted independence, has a Central Government called the Commission. The Governor is its President. Of the eight members of the Commission, five are natives of those Islands and the remaining three Americans. It will thus be seen that the natives form the majority in the Commission.

II.—Home Administration.

(a) Police.

37. The Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd November, reproduces the following observations of the Kolar Goldfield News on a case of police torture in Calcutta:—It is difficult to understand why the policemen, who have progressed in many ways, have not as yet given up torturing people. They, perhaps, resort to this evil in order to make the accused admit the charge laid at his door, and use such admission as evidence against him. It is a matter for surprise that the Police do so not in a remote hamlet but in great cities where there are big Police officers.

38. The Andhraprakasika, of the 4th November, makes remarks similar to those made by the Andhrapatrika of the 30th October, already abstracted on page 1927 under the heading "The highhandedness of the Criminal Investigation Department!"

(b) Courts.

39. In a leaderette under this title, the Andhrapatrika, of the 9th November, makes the following remarks regarding the decision of the High Court of Bombay in the appeal of Mr. Tilak:—The Judges of the High Court of Bombay have upheld the prestige of British justice in an admirable manner, increased a thousandfold the loyalty of the Indians, and established that love wins more than repression such as has been resorted to by the Governments of Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces. Even such a foe of the bureaucracy as Mr. Tilak had justice done to him. If British justice is thus maintained, cries of "Hail British Empire!" will mingle with those of "Hail India!" and "Hail Mr. Tilak!", and insure the future progress of the country.

The triumph of the popular cause.

JANOPAKARI, Vellore, October 1916.

Medical inspection of schools.

40. In dwelling upon the necessity for a periodical inspection of schools by a medical man, the Janopakari *, for October, says:—The Educational authorities should divide the schools in each district into a number of circles and appoint a doctor to inspect the schools in each circle. Every boy should be examined by the doctor within ten days of his admission into the school, and it is better to conduct this examination in the presence of the parents of the boy, so that they may know the condition of his health and take steps to improve the same. The points connected with the health of a boy observed by the doctor during the examination may be noted in a separate book to be maintained for the purpose, and an extract therefrom may be sent to the school to which the boy may be transferred.

The following instructions may be observed by the Educational authorities in dealing with the students:—

(1) The addresses of the parents of boys should be ascertained and the boys sent for treatment, whenever it is necessary.

(2) There should be some nurses in each school, whose duty will be to visit the boys in their houses and treat them for any ailments.

(3) The medical officers in charge of the hospitals near schools should be entrusted with the duty of taking care of the health of the boys in those schools.

(4) Pamphlets should be issued in the vernacular of the locality about contagious diseases for the benefit of the teachers, so that they may find out the students suffering from such diseases and send them to hospitals.

The doctors inspecting schools should see that the facilities noted below are afforded in every school:—Light should come into the class room from the left side, and it should be sufficient for the students to read a book from a distance. The floor of the class room should be clean and well paved. There should be free ventilation in this room. Proper latrines should be provided near schools for the benefit of the students, with a sufficient supply of water. Good drinking water should also be available for the students and separate vessels kept for the use of different classes of students. Students should never be allowed to sit on the floor and read.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

Agricultural education.

41. The Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd November, says:—In answer to certain questions relating to educational institutions in India in Agriculture and Forestry, put in the Imperial Legislative Council, the Government said that the Agricultural Colleges in India compared favourably with similar institutions in Europe. If that were so, why should Indian young men go to England to receive professional training and depend upon the Secretary of State? Is not this derogatory to the self-respect of both the Indians and the Government of India? The Hon'ble Mr. Hill who spoke on behalf of the Government said that the Government of India hoped that in the case of Agricultural institutions at least, it would be possible to teach up to a standard which would qualify for admission to the Imperial Service. See how careful the Hon'ble Mr. Hill was in his reply. Otherwise, will not the Nawab who controls the Government of India from Westminster, fly in rage against them? Our Government have hitherto been treating the agricultural, commercial and industrial education as inferior to literary education. But now they have begun to look upon the former as equal in importance to the latter. This augurs good. We hope that the Universities will soon undertake to impart agricultural education, that commercial education will spread all over India as in Bombay under the care of the Universities, and that industrial education will soon receive the attention that it deserves.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

A view of the conference.

42. The Qaumi Report, of the 2nd November, has a leading article in which it favourably reviews the recent proceedings of the Muslim Educational Conference at Vāniyambādi. It sums up as follows:—Saiyid Ross Masūd has raised the banner of learning at Vāniyambādi, and Mr. Hydari has pointed out the way of success.

God grant that the day may be very near when all the Mussalmans of Southern India will rally beneath its folds and begin to pursue the way indicated; then will victory be assured for Islam.

(h) Railways.

43. The Mushir-i-Dakhan, of the 28th October, writes:—In spite of the fact that there was a large number of first and second class passengers travelling by the train which left Wadi at midnight last Wednesday, no arrangements were made for their comfortable accommodation. Owing to the scanty accommodation some first and second class passengers had to travel in second and third class carriages, respectively. To crown all, the first and second class passengers had no light after Chittapur because only sufficient gas had been taken in Wadi to last thus far.

MUSHIR-I-DAKHAN, Hyderabad, Oct. 28th, 1916.

Darkness in railway management demanding the attention of Mr. Glancy.

It is amazing and astounding that in this age of enlightenment there should be such darkness in railway management.

Mr. Glancy, in his capacity of Director of the Railway, is always prepared to listen to passengers' complaints and to redress their grievances. When through the medium of this paper the report of last Wednesday night's example of railway mismanagement in the matter of lighting catches his eye, he will surely attend to the matter forthwith and prevent a recurrence of such darkness in railway management.

(k) General.

44. Referring to the remarks of the Judges, who heard these appeals, about the arbitrary nature of the provisions of the Press Act, the * Vaisyamitran, of the 30th October, prays that the opinion expressed both in the Madras and Calcutta High Courts on this law should be borne in mind by His Excellency the Viceroy when receiving the press deputation in January next.

VAISYAMITRAN, Devakotta, Oct. 30th, 1916.

The New India appeals.

45. The Swadesamitran, of the 2nd November, writes:—This Commission was appointed to inquire into the ways in which the industrial advancement of India could be secured. An inquiry about the possibility of improving the industries of India will necessitate an inquiry about the import and export duties levied here, because India may not be able to compete with foreign countries in manufacturing certain articles unless heavy import duties are levied on such articles. But the British Government has asked the Commission not to go into the question of the import and export tariff, as it will be considered after the war. So an important point connected with the industrial advancement of this country has to be ignored by the Commission altogether. But we hope that the inquiry of the Commission will otherwise aim at improving the condition of this country. The Commission need not go into the question whether the growth of any industry in India will have an adverse effect upon the same industry in England. As the two witnesses examined by the Commission till now have expressed the opinion that this question will have to be considered by the Commission and as we expect other European witnesses to repeat it, we warn the Commission now against attaching any importance to it. As India is now getting several articles from foreign countries, her industrial advancement will surely affect some of the industries of these countries. But how can India be blamed for it? Even in the matter of witnesses, we would insist upon only such men as have a knowledge or experience of matters about which the Commission is enquiring, being examined. We would also point out that the industrial advancement of India should be taken to mean an improvement in the economic condition of the Indians and not of those, who after making money in India, go away to foreign countries. The prosperity of the latter class of men does not confer any permanent benefit on India. The British Government derives its income in India only from the Indians and exists only for their benefit. So anything done by the Government to improve the industries of this country should aim chiefly at increasing the wealth of the people. Coming to the evidence of the witnesses who have been examined till now, one point which was pressed upon the Commission is the necessity of revising the scale of rates charged by railways in this country. It has been a longstanding complaint of merchants here that the excessive rates charged by railways for conveying articles from one place to another hampers the growth of our industries. The majority of the railways here are owned by the Government and even in the case of the others, the Government guarantees the interest on the capital invested. It is a principle admitted in these days that a Government should sacrifice its income in view to the development of industries in the country. Then again experience throughout the world has proved that a reduction in the scale of rates does not always reduce the income of a railway. So the Government is bound to reduce the rates in their railways and is justified in insisting upon the other railways also doing so.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Nov. 5th, 1916.

The Industrial Commisson.

The Desabhimani, of the 5th November, says:—The evidence of English merchants before the Industrial Commission deserves to be noted. They said that the Government should have nothing to do with Indian industries, and that they should not help the Indians in anything in which they could not help themselves. Their motive in giving this opinion is plain. If indigenous industries should thrive, the trade of foreigners would suffer. The English traders like that the Government should interfere with the Indians in every matter relating to administration, but do not like that they should have anything to do with them in the matter of industries. The only remedy for this is swaraj.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

The Industrial Commission.

The Manorama, of the 3rd November, endorses the views of the Hon'ble Mr. James Curry, as contained in his evidence before the Industrial Commission, and hopes that the results of their enquiry will not be as disappointing as those of former Commissions.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Yogakshemam, of the 3rd November points out that, owing to the carelessness in the selection of persons to give evidence before the Commission, or because of too much care therein, the evidence so far recorded is favourable only to foreign manufacturers; and that neither the foreign merchants here nor those Indians, who deal in foreign articles, or who are engaged as the agents of the former, are not likely to say anything which may be against their interests, condemns the statements of a European witness, who said that it was enough for India to produce raw materials to be exported to foreign countries, and that it is unnecessary for the Government to give pecuniary assistance to the people in this matter, and hopes that more attention would be bestowed on the selection of witnesses.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Industrial Commission.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 4th November, also dwells upon the valuelessness of the evidence of big merchants and factory owners, whom self-interest will not allow to tender it in an impartial manner, points out that, without Government help, indigenous industries cannot thrive, and that the matter to be considered is what industries require such help, and in what manner it should be given them, and thinks that, besides taking steps to revive the old industries, which are now dying out, new factories, after European models, should also be established.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

Another order to Mrs. Besant.

46. Adverting to the order of the Government of the United Provinces and that of Berar prohibiting the entry of Mrs. Besant into their dominions, the Swadesamitran, of the 2nd November, observes:—"It is under the powers conferred by an Act, which was intended to be used only for military purposes occasioned by the war, that those orders have been passed. No one can say that Mrs. Besant intends to do any harm to the Government from a military point of view. Her loyalty has been admitted by the Judges of the Madras High Court. So there is no doubt that this Act has been misapplied in her case. It is stated in those orders that those Governments have information that she has acted or is likely to act against the interests of public peace. Unless the information is to the effect that Mrs. Besant intends to create a disturbance, she cannot be said to act against the interests of public peace. We are not told who the informants are. Perhaps they may be none other than the Criminal Investigation Department men. To issue an order like this, relying upon their reports alone is practically taking away the liberty of His Majesty's subjects. For aught we know, Mrs. Besant's visit to Amraoti was only in connection with her theosophical work. Granting that she intended to deliver a lecture on Home Rule, how could it affect public peace? That there is nothing wrong in speaking or writing about Home Rule has been admitted, not only by Lord Hardinge but also by the Bombay and the Madras Governments. The present action of the United Provinces and the Berar Governments may, therefore, create a wrong impression that they are unnecessarily alarmed. We hope the Government of India will soon see that the Provincial Governments do not misuse the Defence of India Act, and that the orders now issued to Mrs. Besant are withdrawn.

The Vidyabhanu, of the 6th November, reproduces the substance of the above remarks.

VIDYABHANU, Konapet, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 3rd November, reproduces the comments of the Swadesamitran of the 2nd November, on this subject, laying special stress upon the misapplication of the Defence of India Act to cases like this, which have not the remotest connection with the war.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

Another order to Mrs. Besant.

The Lokopakari, of the 6th November, also condemns the action of the United Provinces and Berar Governments in having prevented Mrs. Besant from going to Amraoti, and observes that the haphazard application of the Press Act and the Defence of India Act to one like Mrs. Besant, whose loyalty has been admitted even by the High Court Judges who tried her, is bound to cause immense dissatisfaction in the country.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

47. Referring to the order of the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, prohibiting Mrs. Besant who was to go to Amraoti as President of the Theosophical Conference, from entering those Provinces, the Andhrapatrika, of the 2nd November, says:—Can this act of the Chief Commissioner promote peace in the country? Will not the idea gain ground that a law to which our representatives gave their assent under the impression that it is merely a war measure, is being enforced against persons devoted to the service of the country? While giving expression to generous sentiments on the one hand, the authorities are, on the other hand, putting a law to a use different from what was originally intended and are thus paining the minds of the people. It is the opinion of some that the Defence of India Act is by itself unlawful. Is it not much more so to use it for a purpose different from the one which the legislators had in mind? Will not such a use of the law increase agitation instead of decreasing it? We hope that Lord Chelmsford will restrain the acts of the local authorities in this matter and proclaim to the people that the war measure in question will be used only for the purpose for which it was intended, and be repealed after the war.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

Referring to the order prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Central Provinces, the Desabhimani, of the 5th November, says:—The public is at a loss to know how her entry into those Provinces will affect the peace of the country.

DESABHIMANI, Guntur, Nov. 5th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The order is unjustifiable and it is hoped that Lord Chelmsford will follow the example of Lord Hardinge, annul the order, and restore peace to the country.

KISTNAPATRIKA, Masulipatam, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Kistnapatrika, of the 4th November, says :—The Government of the Central Provinces have threatened Mrs. Besant with punishment if she should enter those Provinces. They are rulers and can exercise their authority. What can we do? Everybody is taken by surprise, and is overwhelmed with grief. The gods above are watching. For what offence of Mrs. Besant's is this a punishment? No, not for any offence. The punishment will only serve to perpetuate her name.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 8th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 8th November, says:—While the people are still protesting in the press and on public platforms against the action of the Bombay Government in restricting the movements of Mrs. Besant, it is deplorable that her entry into the Central Provinces and Berar has been prohibited. She was to go to Amraoti as President of the Theosophical Conference. There is no room for sedition in the Theosophical Society. If the rulers do not enforce the Defence of India Act with discretion, the people will naturally cherish hatred. The Government will do well to be peacefully disposed at present.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 4th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

Referring to the order prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Central Provinces and Berar, the Kerala Patrika, of the 4th November, thinks that her advocacy of Home Rule for India cannot in itself be the cause of this order, as many others are also clamouring for it, and insinuates that her statement that her "white skin" would protect her, might have led to it.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

Mrs. Besant and the Central Provinces Government.

48. The Manorama, of the 3rd November, expresses regret that Mrs. Besant should also be prohibited from entering the Central Provinces and Berar.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

Referring to the same subject, the Yogakshemam, of the 3rd November, points out that the object of the order is to prevent Mrs. Besant from presiding over the deliberations of the Theosophical Conference at Amraoti, and that she may, likewise, be excluded from the United Provinces, so that she may not attend the Lucknow Congress, and observes that it is surprising that the Madras Government should permit a lady, who, in the opinion of the Government, cannot enter any of these places, to remain in Madras.

DESABHIMANI, Quilon, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Desabhimani, of the 4th November, pays a glowing tribute to Mrs. Besant for the skill with which she has been fighting against the Press Act, whose provisions, it thinks, are as elastic as the india-rubber, and other measures of a similar nature, and deplores that, as a result, she should now be prohibited from entering the Central Provinces and Berar also.

VAIDYABHANU, Konapet, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

Minor zamindars and the Court of Wards.

49. The Vidyabhanu, of the 2nd November, takes exception to minor zamindars under the Court of Wards being allowed to take possession of their estates soon after they come of age and says:—In very many cases these zamindars get into the hands of unscrupulous men who have been feeding on their property during the time of the previous owners, and no wonder that they begin to squander their money soon and get into difficulties. In order to avoid this evil, we would suggest that the Court of Wards should continue to manage the estate of a minor zamindar for at least three years after it is handed over to him. The Government may also insist upon the zamindar employing capable men under him. If the Court of Wards cannot supervise the estate after handing it over to the zamindar, a small committee may be appointed to do this work and control the expenditure of the zamindar and prevent him from wasting his money.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

The Secretary of State and reforms in India.

50. Referring to the refutation by the Secretary of State for India of the information published by some newspapers that the reforms suggested in the memorandum of the non-official members of the Imperial Legislative Council were the same as those recommended by Lord Hardinge, the Swadesamitran, of the 3rd November, remarks:—The haste with which the Secretary of State has come out with this refutation will no doubt set people thinking about the reason for it. But the communication from the Secretary of State proves clearly that Lord Hardinge did send up a recommendation as to the reforms necessary for India, no matter whether this was done officially or not. We hope that the subject of these reforms will not end with this communiquè issued by the Secretary of State and that they will receive due consideration at the hands of this officer.

51. The *Janopakari, for October 1916, writes:—It is a well-known fact that the condition of our ryots is very bad, when compared with that of their brethren in the western countries. The prosperity of India depends upon agriculture. No doubt there are several industrial concerns in different places in the country. But these do not seem to be worked on modern methods. The industrial advancement of other countries is due in a great measure to the material help rendered by the Governments of those countries. It is regrettable indeed that the Government is not able to give such help to industries in India. If agriculture is carried on properly, it can by itself improve the condition of the country. The ryots in Canada, Australia and other countries are much richer than those in India, and one reason for this is that they are able to obtain the full produce of their lands, while in India it is not so. This in turn is due to several causes. One is that the climatic conditions of India prevent a land yielding as much produce as land in a cooler climate. Another cause is the uncertainty of the sources of irrigation being always available in India. The Government has, no doubt, solved this problem in some places by creating artificial water sources for irrigational purposes. But the extent of lands irrigated by such sources is very small when compared with the extent of cultivated lands in the country. A third reason for the disparity in the yield is the ignorance of the Indian ryot of modern improved methods of cultivation. The Government is, no doubt, doing much to teach these methods to the ryots here. The agricultural schools and colleges started in different places in this country impart regular instruction on this subject. But as the language of instruction in them is English, it is only such men as wish to enter Government service later on that come to study in them. If the ordinary ryot, not knowing English, is to be benefited by these institutions, instruction must be imparted in the vernaculars of the country and the number of agricultural schools should also be increased. Unless this is done, the efforts of the Government to improve the condition of the Indian ryot will not prove very fruitful. In addition to this, the nature of the education imparted in ordinary elementary schools should also be changed. As it is, it creates in the pupils an aversion to agriculture. This should not be the case. The subjects taught in elementary schools should include agriculture also. The next grievance of the Indian ryot impending his progress is want of money. The majority of the ryots here are poor. They have to borrow money even for cultivating their lands and they are drowned in debt in course of time. The Government should take steps to prevent the Indian ryot getting into the hands of the professional money-lender, by advancing money to them for purposes of cultivation on easy terms. The agricultural loans granted by the Government do not seem to be available for the ryots easily. The difficulties which now exist in the ryots getting these loans should be removed. There is another way in which the Government can help the ryots materially and that is by opening depots in different places for selling seeds, manures, agricultural implements, etc., to the ryots, the value of the same being collected in instalments with the kist. Though this may entail some trouble on the Government, it is bound to take it in the interests of the ryots.

The needs of the ryots in India.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

Stray notes.

52. Under this heading, a correspondent to the Prapanchamitran, of the 3rd November, writes with the nom-de-plume of Narada:—The President of the Corporation of Madras is a straightforward man. When a Commissioner drew his attention to the frequency of thefts in Mylapore and asked for the municipal lamps being allowed to burn throughout the night, at least in the month of October, the President replied that the prevention of thefts was the duty of the police and not of the Corporation. The idea of the Commissioner in putting the question was evidently that, if the lamps were kept burning throughout the night, thieves would find it difficult to ply their trade. The prevention and detection of thefts are no doubt the duties of the police; but it is not their duty surely to keep the municipal lamps burning throughout the night. How can this be seen, unless one spends some thought over it?

A notice has been served upon the editor of the Express, a paper in Bankipore, to show cause why security should not be demanded from him. We do not know how many papers are yet to become the victims of the Press Act of 1910. Both the Judges of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts have condemned this Act, and the people are constantly complaining against it. The Viceroy has also consented to receive a deputation from the Press Association on this subject. But the Press Act still exists and continues to commit its havoc.

The Russians changed the names of their towns, as they had an Austrian or a German tinge. The French and the English are also determined to do away with everything German. It was stated at the time the Indian Press Act was passed that it was modelled on an Austrian statute. Why cannot this Act be repealed at least on the ground that it was copied from the dominions of an enemy?

The Bombay Provincial Conference which met at Ahmedabad was attended by both the moderates and nationalists. One of the speakers at this conference stated that those who, instead of trying to remove the obstacles in the way of the Indians joining the army, tried to perpetuate them are unconsciously helping the enemies of the Government. This is really true. If the Indians had been allowed to enter the army freely, the number of Indian troops fighting on the side of England will now be not less than two crores and the Germans would have been defeated long ago. When will the Government understand this?

In India, the policeman may do anything he likes. He is the master of himself and especially so is the Criminal Investigation Department man. There is no limit to his authority. The District Magistrate of Ahmedabad wrote to the Secretary of the Provincial Conference that Criminal Investigation Department reporters should be accommodated with seats in the Conference pandal, but the Secretary refused to do this. Immediately, the District Magistrate issued an order directing the Secretary to allow the Criminal Investigation Department reporters into the pendal. Has not a District Magistrate power? If an officer receiving more than Rs. 2,000 as salary has not even this power, what is the use of his position? Oh! English officials! Should you exercise only your power over us? Cannot you evince the least love for us?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

The Department of Industries.

53. In commenting on the report of the Local Industrial Department for 1915–16, the Andhrapatrika, of the 3rd November, says:—The authorities proposed to open a commercial school in this city, but they have not as yet carried out the proposal. From this it will be evident that although they are trying to improve the economic condition of the country, they do not do so with sufficient zeal. Again, war has affected the Industrial Department most seriously. The department has been carrying on its work in a slipshod way from the very beginning. It had to work last year in very unfavourable circumstances. It remains to be seen what Mr. Couchman is going to do to improve the situation. The Government have to help the department freely, and without such help no good will come out of it.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th November, says:—We hope that the Industrial Commission will not make the work of industrial education an insignificant appendage to the department of industries, but will give it a separate place altogether and suggest means for its development. The Government offer every year six scholarships to candidates wishing to receive education in the Victoria Technical Institute in Bombay. Last year only two were granted, no application having been received for the remaining four. This is due not to any want of enthusiasm on the part of students, but to the impossible nature of the qualifications required of them by the Government. This was the case not only last year, but also the year before. When candidates possessing the required qualifications were not forthcoming, why should not the Government reconsider the matter?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Department of Industries.

The Andhrapatrika, of the 7th November, says:—The Government spent, in 1915–16, Rs. 35,116 on machinery required for the manufacture of pencils, glass, oil, etc. Even supposing that they devoted a fourth of this sum to pencils, that does not amount even to Rs. 9,000. What could the experts do with such a small outlay? What could the Director of Industries do? The greater part of this sum must have been paid away as pay and batta to workmen, and very little must have remained for experiments in the manufacture of pencils.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 7th, 1916.

The Madras Executive Council.

54. The Andhrapatrika, of the 4th November, is in full agreement with the resolution of the Madras Provincial Committee of the Congress praying that after the expiry of the term of office of the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar in the Executive Council, a non-official Indian may be appointed in his place.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Indian Member of the Madras Executive Council.

The Andhraprakasika, of the 4th November, says:—The Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar has, as a Member of the Madras Executive Council, displeased many and pleased only a few. His administration has failed to command the appreciation of all. Unless the officers of the Government suit their administration to the times, it will be difficult for them to command the esteem of the public. It is only those that adapt themselves to the times that are deemed fit to bear the burden of Government. We trust that the authorities will remember this in appointing the next Indian Member of the Council.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

Imprisonment for labour offences.

55. Referring to the fact that two women labourers were imprisoned in Ceylon for an offence under the Labour Act, the Andhraprakasika, of the 1st November, says that on being asked by the Chairman of the Emigration Enquiry Commission to excuse the portion of the term of imprisonment now remaining, the Government of Ceylon replied they could not do so, for if they did, they would find it difficult to maintain discipline in the estates. It is highly wrong, says the paper, to act mercilessly in the name of discipline.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

The Indian Chiefs' Conference.

56. The Andhraprakasika, of the 1st November, says:—In his welcome address to the Indian Chiefs' Conference, His Excellency the Viceroy has stated that a constitutional assembly may grow out of such Conferences, which will take its place in the Government of this empire. This brings to our memory the discussion on the Chiefs' Advisory Committee proposed at the time of the introduction of the Morley-Minto Reforms. The whole country was then unanimous in protesting against the creation of such a committee, and even now cannot but deprecate the formation of any such committee. We hope that Lord Chelmsford will remember this.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

The Indian Chiefs' Conference.

In commenting on the proceedings of the conference of Indian Chiefs and on His Excellency the Viceroy's reply to the address made to him by His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda, the Andhrapatrika, of the 6th November, says:—His Excellency advised the Indian Chiefs not to be in haste fo development and told them that it is useless to be in a hurry. Indians, including the leaders of the people and the aristocracy, have been hearing such advice for long, and there is no doubt that they will differ from His Excellency in this matter. At any rate, His Excellency deserves the gratitude of the whole of India for arranging for a conference of this kind, which will conduce to the advancement of the ruling Indian Chiefs.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

The Chiefs' Conference.

The Malayalam papers received so far have articles dwelling upon the importance and usefulness of the "Chiefs' Conference," and most of them express a hope that it will become a permanent institution. The Yogakshemam, of the 3rd November, says:—The speeches of the Viceroy and the Gaekwar of Baroda make it clear that the Native Rulers will be called upon to express their opinions only on matters relating to the administration of their States and that they will have nothing to do with affairs of British India. . . . . From the treaties between the British Government and the rulers of important Native States, it would seem that the former regarded the latter as equals. But it has been a longstanding complaint that the Maharajas not only lost this equality, but their very existence as rulers depended on the will of the Resident. If, therefore, this conference should tend to maintain their dignity and position, its object may be said to be a good one. After the war, many changes will be introduced into the machinery of administration in British India, and the Indians will be granted certain privileges. Under such circumstances there is sure to be trouble, if the Native Rulers continue to administer their States according to old mamul.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 4th, 1916.

The Chiefs' Conference.

In approving of the Chiefs' Conference at Delhi, the Kerala Patrika, of the 4th November, refers to the overweening and high-handed manner in which some of the Residents had been interfering with the administration of certain Native States before the time of Lord Curzon, thinks that this conference should be held annually, and that the expenditure incurred on this account by the Chiefs cannot be regarded as unnecessary, and suggests that all the Native States should be placed directly under the Supreme Government.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Nov. 6th, 1916.

The Chiefs' Conference.

Referring to the Chiefs' conferring, the Lokaprakasam, of the 6th November, has, inter alia, the following in English:—"Addressing the distinguished guests His Excellency said: 'You are jealous and rightly jealous of your position as Ruling Princes and Chiefs, owing allegiance to His Majesty the King Emperor, and there is, I hope, no need for me to assure you that I have no desire to infringe in your domestic concerns.' An assurance of the kind given by His Excellency would have been quite unnecessary, but for the unfortunate and aggressive encroachment upon their freedom during the turbulent Viceroyalty of Lord Curzon. These Princes, as His Excellency observed, have no right to interfere in the domestic affairs of British India. This particular point could well have been omitted in the speech as there was not a single instance in the past, wherein any of our Princes exhibited a taste therefor. Examples, on the other hand, will not be wanting in which the representatives of the Paramount Power have been found interfering in the administration of Native States, domestic and otherwise, so as to result in undesirable consequences. Should the recent assemblage result in the practical establishment of a constitutional assembly of Indian Princes, such unwarranted encroachments of these political agents will be a thing of the past. We do not, for a moment, deny that there are none (sic) in their ranks who fully realising their position and responsibility act in such a manner as to strengthen in the natural relationship. The assurance given by His Excellency, as regards his strict adherence to the treaties between the British Crown and their States, was very opportune, and the Viceroy's earnest desire to maintain their integrity not only in the letter but in the spirit in which they were framed is worthy of commendation.

"As was rightly anticipated in certain well-informed circles, it was very significant that His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda came forward as the spokesman of his brother Princes on this historic occasion. While claiming their share in the Empire, with which their destinies are indissolubly linked, His Highness clearly pointed out the need of an assembly of Princes based upon proper lines where important questions regarding themselves and their States could be discussed and settled. Indian Princes, as the Maharaja observed, represent in area one-third of Indian Empire and one-fourth of its entire population and as such they have a clear voice which is bound to have it share of respect. His Highness was plain and emphatic. When he said that they had 'no desire to encroach upon the affairs of British India any more than we want any body outside our State to interfere with the affairs of our own States and ourselves'.

"The two important speeches were much appreciated, and if the assurances of His Excellency are carried out to the letter and spirit they will be equally reciprocated by the Indian Princes so as to result in the increased well-being and confidence of both, more of which is wanted in India at present."

57. The Andhrachandrika, of the 2nd November, has the following:— Until a provincial secretary is appointed, Home Rule agitation will not be productive of much good. The people suggest that Mr. Harisarvottama Rao should be chosen as secretary for the Andhra country. It is good to choose him and begin work soon. The desire for Home Rule should spread from village to village. Until then there will be no good.

Home Rule.

ANDHRACHANDRIKA, Proddatur, Nov. 2nd, 1916.

58. In the issues of the Andhrapatrika, for the week ending with the 11th November, are found regular contributions from correspondents, giving detailed description of the distress caused by the floods of the Kistna, the Tungabhadra and other rivers and by the recent incessant and unusually heavy rains, as well as of the various measures of spontaneous charity taken by the public with a view to offer relief to the distressed. The paper in its editorial columns recognises the magnitude of the distress which is said to affect numerous villages belonging to many taluks in Kistna, Kurnool and other Andhra districts, refers to the work done in Bezwada, Guntūr and other places by way of affording relief, makes an appeal for help, and opens a relief fund amounting to over four thousand rupees up to the 9th November.

The distress due to floods.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

59. The Andhraprakasika, of the 1st November, says:—Those who emigrate from this country to foreign lands are not respected in those lands at all. Our country is in no way benefited by their emigration. Mr. Bonar Law has stated that the present system of emigration should continue for at least five years and the Secretary of State for India has acquiesced in this view. This is regrettable. Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Chamberlain propose to introduce a new system of emigration in the place of the present one instead of endeavouring to put a stop to emigration altogether. They look to the well-being of the colonies and neglect that of India. Unless and until emigration is altogether stopped, the troubles of our brethren in the colonies will not end.

Emigration.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 1st, 1916.

60. The Aryavysia, of the 19th October (received on the 9th November) says that adulterated ghee is exported from Guntūr to Calcutta in large quantities, and prays that the Collector will take every step to prevent the adulteration of ghee and the export of adulterated ghee.

The export of adulterated ghee.

ARYAVYSIA, Guntur, Oct. 19th, 1916.

61. The Sasilekha, of the 3rd November, dwells in its leader on the evil of drunkenness, and suggests that arrack shops should not be located in this Presidency near schools, temples, coolies' houses, etc., that they should be located only in places pointed out by the people, and that the Government should give up their Abkāri policy gradually.

Drunkenness.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

62. A correspondent to the Sasilekha, of the 3rd November, suggests that in view of the responsible nature of the work turned out by the village postmaster, he may be paid from Rs. 8 to Rs. 10, and that the runner should not be required to go more than 10 miles a day. He also recommends that both the postmaster and the runner may be paid some pension after retirement. He remarks that it is unjust on the part of the Government not to pay these men living wages, while earning a large income through the Post offices.

The village post office.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

63. The Sasilekha, of the 3rd November, says that the reports of the Madras Agricultural Department contain useful information for the ryots, and prays that an abstract of those reports may be translated into Telugu and Tamil and distributed among the ryots.

The Agricultural Department.

SUDARSINI, Viswasarayapuram, Nov. 1st, 1916.

64. The Sudarsini, of the 1st November, refers to the fact that Jamadar Wazir Khan was granted the second-class Indian Order of Merit medal for his valour in the war, and says that had he been a European he would have been given the Victoria Cross. It remarks that if he had been granted the place of a Lieutenant, that would have pleased the Indians.

A Jamadar's distinguished service.

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Nov. 1st, 1916

65. The Desamata, of the 1st November, says:—It may surprise Indians to learn that between the years 1871 and 1888 the average annual income of India was almost equal to that of the United States, and that between the years 1861 and 1870 it was greater than those of the United States and Germany. The people of such a prosperous country are today starving without food and are helpless not knowing what to do.

India's income.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 9th, 1916.

66. The Andhrapatrika, of the 9th November, states that Rabindranath Tagore, who is now delivering lectures in America, has received and rejected invitations from Toronto and Montreal, saying that he would not set his foot on the land of a people that have insulted his mother country, and commends his patriotic spirit.

Rabindranath's patriotism.

ABHINAVASARASWATI, Guntür, (July. Aug., Sept. 1916.)

67. The editor of the Abhinavasaraswati, in his metrical narration of the suit between him and the goldsmiths, in the volumes for July, August and September (received on 9th November 1916), makes the following aspersion against a Sudra witness while commenting upon his evidence in the court:—"A Sudra is born with all vices such as lying which wear out by serving the Brahmans; such being the case how can a Sudra who altogether hates the Brahmans fail to be a liar simply because he pays a large amount of land tax."

In a foot-note, the editor quotes passages from the Anusasanikaparva of the Bharata in support of his remark.

The Sudras.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Nov. 9th, 1916.

68. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 9th November, writes:—In a book on this subject written by one Bevan, the author states that it is impossible to grant Home Rule to India, that the Hindus and the Moslems are not on good terms with each other, that although the principal castes are only five in number, there are a myriad of sects and sub-sects among them, and that if these should abandon their faith and become Christians, there is a possibility of their obtaining Home Rule. The author's love of Christianity is indeed highly laudable. It must not be forgotten, however, that even among Christians, there are two important divisions, namely, Catholics and Protestants; and there are numerous sub-sects in each. This does not prevent them from being friendly to one another; while members of the same sect are seen to be at cross lots. Is there no cordiality between the Christian Germans and Moslem Turks? Are not the British and the Germans mutual enemies, although they both belong to the Christian religion? Do we not see children of the same parents sometimes become deadly enemies to each other? The author is, therefore, wrong to hold that it is necessary to adopt the Christian faith in order to obtain Home Rule.

Christianity and Home Rule.

69. The Manorama, of the 3rd November, points out that the increase in the pay of the clerks of the Registration department has, owing to the discontinuance of the famine allowance, made those whose pay was Rs. 17½, losers in the bargain, and hopes that the Government will be pleased to redress their grievance.

Clerks in the Registration Department.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

70. The Manorama, of the 3rd November, congratulates the Government on their decision, though rather bilated, to take the Tiyyas of Malabar into the army, and hopes that the Tiyya leaders will do everything possible to induce their youths to join the army, so that the Government may, at a future time, form a separate regiment of their community.

The Tiyyas and the Army.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

71. Referring to the efforts made in England to manufacture all the articles required for her use and also other articles that may be exported, so that English coins may not go out, and those of foreign countries may flow in, the Yogakshemam, of the 3rd November, observes that it is not surprising that nothing in this direction is done in India.

Industries in India and in England.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

72. Referring to the decision of the Calicut Municipal Council by a majority of two votes that the Municipal hospital should be removed to Vellayil on the beach, the Kerala Patrika, of the 4th November, points out that this majority does not represent public opinion on the subject, to ascertain which, however, a public meeting must be held, and takes strong exception to the proposed removal.

The Calicut Municipal hospital.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 4th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Manorama, of the 7th November, also expresses similar views, and draws attention to the opinion of the "site committee" and of the Surgeon-General on the question.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 7th, 1916.

73. Referring to the nomination, by the Government, of Mr. Marjoribanks and the Hon'ble Mr. Ahmed Tambi Marakkayar to inquire into the condition of the Indian coolies in Ceylon and other places, the Prapanchamitran, of the 3rd November, says:—We learn that Mr. Marjoribanks has not been a very sympathetic District officer, and that he has no regard for the feelings of the Indians. Even in the case of the Hon'ble Mr. Marakkayar we have to presume from his re-election to the council that he has done some good to his countrymen. Otherwise we have not heard of anything done by him to prove that he has a genuine sympathy for his poorer brethren. So we are surprised at the nomination of these two gentlemen by the Madras Government.

Indian coolies in foreign countries.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

74. The Manorama, of the 7th November, points out that the Hon'ble Mr. Marakkayar is in every way qualified to work with Mr. Marjoribanks who has been deputed to enquire into the condition of the coolies in Ceylon, and congratulates the Government on the happy selection they have made.

Indian coolies in Ceylon.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 7th, 1916.

75. In continuation of the article on this subject (reported last week), the Swadeshabhimani, of the 3rd November, in a leader under the heading "we must not lose this opportunity", after explaining the reasons given by the members as to why this memorandum is submitted at this juncture, remarks:—The memorandum states the bare facts. There is not one word of exaggeration in it. Mr. Gokhale was not unmindful of the inadequate nature of the Minto-Morley Reforms. Those who say that a leader like Gokhale considered them sufficient for the present, cannot have forgotten his importunate words both in the council and outside it after the reforms were announced. Those words can have no meaning if he thought that India should be content with these reforms for some fifty or hundred years. Further, the memorandum has been signed by his chief disciple, the Hon'ble Mr. Srinivasa Sastri. It is natural to infer from this what the late Mr. Gokhale's views must have been. To give only a little conjee water and to call it bread and to tell us not to be hasty or greedy in eating it and to frighten us saying that it might upset our stomach if we should have more, this jugglery would be consistent only with Anglo-Indian nature and would never appeal to the wisdom or liberality of others. The members have clearly proved that these Minto-Morley Reforms are not such solid bread as they seem to make out, but only conjee water as we said above. It might be asked why it was that these reforms were hailed with such universal joy. The answer to it is to be found in the political situation of the country at that time. Lord Curzon had thrown a damper on the aspirations of the people. Queen Victoria's proclamation had been included in the list of impossibilities, and India and her people had been branded with the charge of untruthfulness. Not content with this, Lord Curzon resorted to the partition of Bengal as the crowning act of his reactionary policy. What wonder then that when the sympathetic reforms of Minto and Morley were announced soon afterwards, popular leaders such as Gokhale as well as the whole nation received them with joy and gratitude? When the Government themselves were taking up a conciliatory attitude and invited the co-operation of the people in the task of administration, would it not have seemed most ungracious if the people had failed to welcome the new policy? Such an act would have been like throwing salt into custard. The Indians would never stoop to it. That explains the universal rejoicings over the Minto-Morley Reforms. Further, they were received only as part of the many things that were demanded. The Honourable Members have explained that it was only as an earnest that these reforms were received. We would prefer to call them as the first instalment of swaraj. When we get what was already our own, it would be more appropriate to call it an "instalment" rather than an "earnest". Again some of our critics object that it was improper to have made this demand of a second instalment of swaraj during the continuance of the war. That cannot be. At the close of the war, there cannot but be sweeping changes, political, social and economic, all over the world. Both neutrals and belligerents have, therefore, already to think of post-war reforms. Why, then, should India alone be advised to remain still? What are the British Colonies which are similarly placed doing? Moreover, although England is using her one arm for fighting, is she not using the other for devising measures for the future? If the children in their true filial duty nurse their father in his illness, without an eye to gain, and then present their wishes when he is past danger, would it be ungracious? Would it annoy the father? What harm then if we likewise tell the Government what they should do after the war! Would it not lead to confusion if we defer our request until the war is actually over? There can be no doubt therefore that the Honourable Members, by submitting this memorandum, have discharged a sacred duty by not losing the opportunity of placing in good time before the British authorities the legitimate aspirations of the people of this country.

The memorandum of the Non-official Members of the Imperial Legislative Council.

SWADESHABHIMANI, Mangalore, Nov. 3rd, 1916.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Nov. 5th, 1916.

Rural sanitation in Mysore.

76. In an article dwelling on the importance of improving the sanitation in rural areas in Mysore, the Mysore Star, of the 5th November, observes:—Much of the present insanitary condition of our villages must be ascribed to the ignorance and illiteracy of our people. It seems to us, therefore, that rural areas are in greater need of the compulsory system of primary education than cities. Instead of the thousand and one methods that are now being devised by our Government for village improvements if they should only pay more earnest attention to the question of compulsory primary education, their efforts are sure to produce better and more speedy results.

II.—Home Administration.

A policeman pays compensation.

1. The West Coast Reformer, of the 10th November, writes:—"We seldom come across a case in which the police, when they happen to be the complainants are ordered to pay compensation to the accused when the complaint is found to be false by the Magistrate. It is therefore noteworthy that the Town Magistrate of Calicut ordered a police man, on Wednesday, to pay a compensation of half a rupee to each of the five cherumas (the humblest of the depressed classes) whom the police man was found to have falsely charged with an offence of public nuisance. We hope the police man concerned and his belted comrades will learn a salutary lesson from the interesting result of this case. Many official reports and the reviews especially of the Police Department bristle with references to the prevalence of false complaints in this country and the consequent difficulties of the police and the judiciary and certain high placed Magistrates have made excathedra pronouncements on this fancied or exaggerated evil. The magistracy should, therefore, deal with police men who bring false complaints far more severely than with ignorant and irresponsible individuals who may be found guilty of similar misdemeanour." West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Criminal Investigation Department.

2. The following appears in New India of the 11th November:—"If we were so happy as to have the ear of the Government, we would ask them to use a little more care in the instructions issued to the Criminal Investigation Department. Is there any need, for instance, that these should make themselves unnecessarily offensive at public meetings? On one day, this last week, the Criminal Investigation Department man was the only man who sat during the opening prayer, even though he was asked to rise. At another meeting, where Mrs. Besant herself took him through a dense crowd, he, feeling himself to be safe, made provocative gestures, and she had to take him away in her car, lest his provocation should cause trouble. Surely such men might be instructed to behave decently. On a third day, a Criminal Investigation Department man wanted to intrude on a meeting of the Congress Committee. Those men belong to the Criminal Investigation Department. Are we then all criminals in the eyes of the Government, that all we do is to be investigated? Cannot the Government understand that gently born and nurtured people, and people, moreover, who had done all that they could to help the Government in the war, feel it to be a deadly insult to be spied on by these unmannerly persons, and to be constantly harried by them? Why cannot they look after robbers and murderers instead of after us, attending to their proper business? Perhaps some member of the Legislative Council will draw attention to the offensive ways of these men, who, be it remembered, are paid for by us." New India, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

(b) Courts.

The Madras Mail and the Tilak appeal case.

3. The Hindu, of the 11th November, writes:—"A most malignant and singularly ferocious attack on Mr. Tilak appears in an article in yesterday's Madras Mail, under the heading 'The Tilak Appeal.' It is an instance of Anglo-Indian journalistic license carried to extreme lengths, and we believe it is grossly insulting to and libellous of a man who is enshrined in the hearts of thousands of his countrymen as an exalted type of an Indian patriot. The article is a calculated expression of calumny and Hindu, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

venomous insinuation. It does not concern itself frankly, as it declares itself, with the security case alone and the judgment of the High Court on it. The Anglo-Indian scribe rises superior to such limitations, and rakes up what it calls the 'whole record' of Mr. Tilak. . . . . Because the security proceedings have become infructuous on account of the decision of the High Court, the rabid Anglo-Indian paper forthwith plunges into its old files, and brings out a garbled and in some points a misleading account of Mr. Tilak's 'whole record', and makes the wicked suggestion, that taking security proceedings, 'is not the way to deal with agitators deemed dangerous,' but that 'swift and crushing executive action,' must be taken. The Government is admonished to act the part of the wolf in the old story of the wolf and the lamb. Apart from any action which Mr. Tilak may think fit to take regarding the outrageous attack upon him, we hope the Government will take note of the inflammatory nature of the article and the feeling of embitterment which the writings and attitude of this journal have been creating between Indians and Europeans."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 11th November, says:—"The Madras Mail has become quite hysterical with fury over the judgment of the Bombay High Court in the case of Lokamanya Tilak, annulling the bonds imposed by the District Magistrate of Poona. It recites previous incidents in Lokamanya Tilak's life, the style of the recital being of the well-known type of suggestiveness: 'I do not advise you to put his head under the pump.' . . . . The whole of the paragraph in which this abominable inuendo occurs is actionable at law, for no man has a legal right to bring up convictions against a man outside a Court of Law. But Lokamanya Tilak is not likely to care to sue the Madras Mail. . . . . The Madras Mail itself writes with extraordinary virulence against the British Government in its conduct of the war. For it the Prees Act has no terrors, for it enjoys complete license, and may stir up hatred and contempt as much as it pleases. It demands 'swift and crushing executive action'. 'Let him be instantly and finally broken.' But, after all, the power of the Executive is limited, even in India. It cannot 'crush' without some form of law. We have learnt from the late press case that it can take an editor's property illegally, and yet hold on to it, and that a long and costly process is necessary in order to recover the money illegally taken and illegally held. But that process does not crush nor break. The Madras Mail wants some executive action swift, instant, final. Nothing is 'final' except execution, and sad to say, for that a trial is necessary, and a crime. Unhappily, we are not in Wonderland, and there is no Red Queen to say, 'Off with his head.' The fact that the editor of the Madras Mail does not agree with Lokamanya Tilak and Mrs. Annie Besant is not yet sufficient reason for hanging or shooting them—disappointing as the fact undoubtedly must be that the editor's room in the Madras Mail office is not yet a baron's chamber with the right to inflict the peine forte et dure in mediæval fashion. It is troublesome, we know, that any form of law should intervene between the irate editor and his desired victims, but such are the disadvantages of civilisation, even under an autocracy. . . . . Let us hope that the Madras Mail's warnings of to-day will be disregarded by sane authorities as were those of 'years ago'. No harshness can 'crush' a nation, bent on winning the freedom enjoyed in other parts of the empire, and the 'warnings' of the Madras Mail are direct incitements to violence. If Lokamanya Tilak or Mrs. Annie Besant should be murdered, what will be the position of the editor of the Madras Mail?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

New India, of the 14th November, remarks:—"The Hindu administers a strong and fitting rebuke to the Madras Mail, which has become a veritable fire-brand in Madras, since the departure of Mr. Lawson. . . . . But the Madras Mail is a chartered libertine, and has no fear of the Press Act. If the Hindu or New India said as wicked things of the Government as the Madras Mail says of Indians, they would have short shift. But Anglo-Indian papers are above the law."

The West Coast Spectator, of the 14th November, observes:—"An Anglo-Indian paper falls foul of the Bombay High Court, the Government of Bombay and all and sundry for the justice done to Mr. Tilak. We have no desire to soil our columns by reproducing its fulminations, suffice it to say that it is one of the most reckless and violent piece of writings we have come across. The paper rakes up the past 'record' of Mr. Tilak and opines that he ought not to have been let off.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 14th, 1916.

"The paper would, probably, desire that Mr. Tilak should be shut in some far distant fortress and all legal procedure should be done away with in the case of 'agitators'. An apostle of the theory of 'martial law and no d--d nonsense', the amiable paper would, further, we suppose, demand the closure of all educational institutions and universities which manufacture seditionists and agitators, a demand foreshadowed by Lord Morley."

4. The West Coast Spectator, of the 11th November, writes:—"Throughout the country the greatest satisfaction will be felt at the order of the Bombay High Court quashing the proceedings of the District Magistrate of Poona binding Mr. Tilak down to be of good behaviour. Justices Batchelor and Shah have vindicated justice and demonstrated that the High Courts are the palladiums of the people's liberties. The judgment of the Magistrate was a perverse and involuted mass of reasonings, admitted even by an Anglo-Indian paper as 'harsh and unnecessary'. Our respectful congratulations to Mr. Tilak on this vindication of his character."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Writing on this subject the West Coast Reformer, of the 12th November, says:—"Mr. Tilak's appeal to the Bombay High Court against the order of the District Magistrate of Poona to furnish securities amounting to Rs. 40,000 for good behaviour has been successful. The news will be received with profound satisfaction throughout India. It is a triumph of justice. . . . . It redounds to the glory of British justice that a liberal construction was admitted by the High Court."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Nov. 12th, 1916.

5. The Hindu, of the 15th November, writes:—"The brief telegram which we published on Monday last regarding the resolution on the extension of the jury system moved in the United Provinces Legislative Council, hardly does justice to the discussion that took place. The Hon'ble Syed Wadir Husain moved that the system of trial by jury in Sessions Court which was in force in three districts should be extended to nine more districts. The resolution was opposed by the Government, but nevertheless, it was passed by 21 against 20 votes, thus involving the defeat of the Government. . . . . That the introduction of the system, which is a cardinal principle in British judicial administration, should be opposed at the present day is shocking enough in all conscience. But the arguments adduced on behalf of the Government by the Hon'ble Mr. S. P. O'Donnell were such that nobody, with a well-balanced mind and conversant with the history of the question, could patiently listen to. . . . . It is doing violence to the intentions of the Government in India to say, as Mr. O'Donnell says, that the system is not part of the established machinery of the administration of justice. To look upon the procedure as an exception is to take an unwarranted, narrow and prejudiced view of the matter".

6. New India, of the 11th November, remarks:—"It will be remembered that some weeks ago, 180 students of the Sibpur Engineering College struck work, because of certain grievances for which they did not get redress. At a meeting of the governing body subsequently held, it was decided to expel all the strikers but better counsels seem to have prevailed at last. Consequently, it was notified to the guardians of the students that they would be re-admitted on certain conditions. . . . . Some of these conditions are shockingly severe and vindictive. . . . . It may not also be out of place here to note the constitution of the Council which framed those conditions. We see the name of no Indian in the list published; nor is there that of any official who has been conspicuously known for his sympathy with popular demands. That, to our mind, explains the severity of the punishment inflicted. We also regret to note the absence of any reference to the grievances of the students that brought about the strike. Perhaps it is considered inadvisable, in the interests of 'prestige,' to say anything on that point, or to take any action even. That is, however, a policy which has ceased to find any justification in popular estimation, though our Government seem yet to be ignorant of that change in the angle of vision of the people."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 15th, 1916.

7. New India, of the 15th November, has the following:—

The proposed Patna University. "The thin end of the wedge.

"When Sir Sankaran Nayar introduced at the last meeting of the Supreme Legislative Council the Bill to create a University at Patna, a large number of Indians, who did not go through his speech carefully, were surprised to find an Indian Member of Education backing so reactionary a measure. . . . . Why, then, did he back up such a measure? These critics failed to note his statement that the draft Bill had been sent for the approval of the Secretary of State just before he assumed charge of his office, and after it received sanction from Whitehall it was not possible to alter its constitution.

"It is necessary to note this fact for several reasons. In the first place, it shows the way in which the hands of Sir Sankaran Nayar were tied by his predecessor in a fashion which is admittedly unfair. Sir Harcourt Butler actually sent the draft Bill to England when Sir Sankaran Nayar was on the way from Madras to assume charge of his office. We fully recognise the depth of Sir Harcourt's desire to have an officialised University; but since it was his successor whose function it could not but become to pilot the Bill through the council, was it fair that the latter should not have even a look at the draft before it was finally approved? Moreover, we all know how little responsibility a retiring member of council is generally willing to take concerning matters desired by public opinion. The invariable reply is that the decision must be left to the successor. The performance of Sir Harcourt Butler was dictated by quite the opposite and unnatural policy. Why? Is it because the successor was to be an Indian."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 15th, 1916.

8. Writing under the heading "Indians, watch over the education of India's children" in New India of the 15th November, Mr. G. S. Arundale says:—"The announcement to the press that there will be a meeting of the Directors of Public Instruction towards the end of January 1917 would give rise to a hope that some radical improvement is contemplated in the system of Indian education. But the scandal of the situation lies in the fact that every one of these Directors is a European who, however long he may have lived in this country, has never been, and will never be, in touch with the soul of the Indian people. Directors of Public Instruction in India are, with exceptions, of course, very well-meaning people, and are doubtless acquainted with the theory of education, as well as with its practice along certain narrow lines. They may have been Professors in Government Colleges and Headmasters of Government schools. But they have the fatal defects of being bureaucracy-ridden, and of entering but little into the Indian attitude—a most important consideration for those who are responsible for Indian education. I have not been behind the scenes to know whether Directors of Public Instruction are continually urging upon their respective Governments a broader educational policy, but from their public utterances it is painfully clear that all efforts of the kind are in vain. There is no more stereotyped speech in existence than that of a Director of Public Instruction in India. The solicitude of Government is one platitude. The need to avoid cramming is another. The importance of discipline is a third. That in the school and college we learn to become good citizens is a fourth. Then the importance of women's education is always a safe line to take, as also the amazing fact that character is even more important than intellect! Whatever our Directors of Public Instruction may be when in the bosoms of their respective Governments, I do not know, but in public they contribute little or nothing to progressive education, and neglect in the most extraordinary way certain vital principles of reform which most countries other than Great Britain, and therefore India, have fully and practically recognised.

An official Educational Conference.

"I must confess to a feeling of bitterness that our beloved India's educational future is to be deliberated upon by a group composed exclusively of foreigners. . . . . What right, I ask, has a foreigner who lives in European ways, thinks along European lines of thought, owes primary patriotism to a foreign country, considers English interests when deciding Indian questions, holds himself aloof from Indian society, regards his stay in the country as an exile from his motherland, is descended from alien traditions, and belongs to a religion whose votaries debase education to proselytising purposes—he must, therefore, be heart and soul with them in their efforts, however great the display of official impartiality—what right, I ask, has such a man to preside over the destinies of Indian education? India has tolerated the existing educational conditions for too long, but she has only submitted to them, she has never actively consented. Now is the time for her to declare that foreign domination in education shall cease. Foreign co-operation she may gladly welcome, but it is intolerable—I could use a harsher word—that the question of educational reconstruction should be in the hands of those who are children of a foreign motherland and who will, therefore, determine India's rate of progress according to Britain's convenience, and to the superficial understanding of our bureaucratic birds of passage. . . . . What is to be done? You have to decide now and at once what you want your children to learn; and then you must insist on their so being taught. If the Government refuses to teach them what India requires them to learn, then open private schools and support existing private institutions. Erect your own national system of education. Confer your own degrees, and so stir public opinion that these degrees shall be recognised by your merchants and other employers of labour, even though the Government may boycott them. If the majority of Indian youth learn in national schools and colleges, our rulers will be forced to recognise them. It is the will of the people that matters in national education, for the will of the people is the spirit of the race."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Oct. 16th, 1916.

In his second and concluding article on this subject in New India of the 16th November, Mr. G. S. Arundale observes:—"'There is the question of religious instruction—the basis, as I believe, of all true teaching. In many countries, including the United States of America, Japan, Great Britain and France, the instruction is of the brand called 'moral'. But it cannot be too often pointed out that the idea of separating 'moral' from 'religious' instruction has only arisen from the disgust people have felt at the sight of the quarrels and persecutions which masquerade under the name of religion. In India the foreign nature of the Government and the distortion of education by the Christian Missionary have banished religion from Indian schools and colleges. The Government has no part in the religious life of the people, while the Christian Missionary ridicules and despises all religions save his own. We have to take into our own hands the religious training of the young citizen and follow the wise example of the Government of Mysore which provides in its educational institutions 'specific religious teaching from books like the Sanatana Dharma Advanced Text-Book, the Quran, and approved commentaries and essays on the Muhammadan religion and the Bible'. What a Hindu Government can do, a Christian Government ought to have been able to do too. At least we must get rid of the superstition that morality exists apart from religion, or that there are no great common principles of religious teaching beyond the forms which we call religions.

"Again, there is the question of physical training and discipline. Glaring injustice is the order of the day as regards the former. One of the paramount duties to be inculcated in the young citizen is the defence of his motherland. Yet, while a Christian boy may receive military training through the Boy Scout and Cadet Corps movements, his Hindu and Mussalman fellow-citizens are forbidden to drill with anything more than a 3 feet long stick. It is a scandal and the Indian people must do for their children that which the Government refuses to do. At least the Boy Scout movement may be started under Indian management, since Sir Robert Baden Powell refuses all assistance. As regards discipline, corporal punishment must go, as it has already gone from those countries most advanced in education, e.g., Austria, the United States, France. The association of brutality and cruelty with education has long been a blot on English education, and has found its way to India to the serious injury of our national life. . . . . I ask that this meeting of Directors of Public Instruction shall not be allowed to take place without an expression of the will of the Indian parent as to the welfare of his child. These Directors must learn to be the servants of the Indian nation, and not her masters as they are today. We want national education and no foreign variety. As the babe is the care of the mother, so must youth be the care of the motherland, and the motherland's representatives are the Indian father and the Indian mother, and they alone."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 16th, 1916.

The Presidency College, Madras.

9. The following appears in New India of the 16th November:—

"The rule of the peon.

"The Hindu states that the following notice has been placed upon the boards of the Presidency College by the Principal:

The attention of students is drawn to rule 6, dress and behaviour (College Calendar, page 63) and they are warned that the sergeant and peons have orders to report students shouting and making a noise in the passages and class-rooms during the tiffin hour or other times.

"We have always understood that students are to be treated as gentlemen, but it is clear from the notice that humblest servant is now to join the rest of the staff in subduing the student to a proper sense of discipline. To our thinking the notice is highly improper, for while it is the duty of students to show proper respect for their professors and teachers, they are certainly not called upon to be at the mercy of the peons. We can imagine the undignified scene of a peon warning one of the senior students that if he makes a noise again, he will be reported. Perhaps the students ought not to make the noise, but peons ought not to be allowed to become spies; and this is what the order amounts to."

Promotions in the Salt and Abkāri Department.

10. The West Coast Spectator, of the 9th November, states:—"Our contemporary of the Hindu is surprised that promotions in the Salt and Abkāri Department are not regulated by either seniority or ability and quotes specific instances, chief among them being the repeated supersession of Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar, one of the ablest Inspectors who had more than once acted as Assistant Commissioner, to prove its case. Our contemporary might probably have heard that the Abkāri Department is popularly known as the Bikkari Department, and supersessions and favoured appointments are not, therefore, surprising. In regard to the particular case of Mr. Ayyar, we would refer our contemporary to his evidence before the Islington Commission, which explains why he is constantly snubbed and superseded."

WEDNESDAY REVIEW, Trichinopoly, Nov. 8th, 1916.

The Government of the Central Provinces and Mrs. Besant.

11. The Wednesday Review, for the week ending 8th November, writes:—"The action taken by the Central Provinces Government against Mrs. Besant has been construed in certain quarters as a departure from the accepted policy of religious neutrality, and as a corollary the cry of religion in danger has been raised. Those who imagine that the Central Provinces Government are engaged in a crusade against theosophy have either deliberately confounded the issues or are honestly ignorant of the facts of the situation. . . . . In prohibiting the entrance of Mrs. Besant into their respective areas by the Governments of Bombay and the Central Provinces, neither of them have been actuated by ill-will to theosophy or to Mrs. Besant as the President of the Theosophical Society. Their action has been actuated by exclusively political considerations and even by the widest stretch of imagination we cannot look upon it as a flank attack against theosophy, and those who have been responsible for the cry must know in their heart of hearts what exactly is the truth of the case. Both the Provincial Governments who have taken action against Mrs. Besant under the Defence of India Act have done so to prevent her from carrying on her political propaganda which they consider to be in the highest degree inexpedient and dangerous to public peace and safety. Their action has to be judged on its own merits and in view of Mrs. Besant's political faith as disclosed in her writings and speeches; and no good purpose is served by attempting to twist it into an attack against the religions of India in general and the theosophical cult in particular."

The South Indian Mail, for the week ending 13th November, remarks :— "A public meeting of the citizens of Madura was held yesterday in the Victoria Edward Hall to protest against the order of the Government of Central Provinces and Berar prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering those provinces. Rao Bahadur G. Srinivasa Rao was in the chair. The gentlemen including the chairman of the meeting who took part in the proceedings of that day are some of the best intellects that Madura has ever produced and of whom any city in this vast country might be proud. . . . . The mover of the resolution has succinctly pointed out that the measure was an emergency measure, and that its application could only be justified in the case of those who are determined enemies of the British Empire and who put obstacles in the way of the successful termination of the war. That is the only ground on which the act can be suffered to exist on the statute book and the drastic nature of the measure becomes revealed when it is applied in the case of those who are acclaimed to be the firm supporters of the British Empire. . . . . It is not a question of depriving Mrs. Besant of her liberty individually, but it is a vital question connected with the preservation of the safety of the person of the subject of His Majesty. We believe that it is possible to understand the meaning of the volume of indignation which the setting in motion of the measure in her case has aroused only on that score and the action of the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar was particularly to be condemned inasmuch as it has attempted to infringe the religious neutrality which has been vouchsafed to the Indians in the Great Proclamation. . . . . It is worthy of note that throughout the proceedings of the meeting, a deep sense of responsibility prevailed, and it is matter for congratulation that our public meetings are becoming calm, deliberate and speedy, however urgent is the public interest which calls forth such meetings."

SOUTH INDIAN MAIL, Madura, Nov. 13th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the Hindu, of the 14th November, says :—"In reply to a question from the Hon'ble Mr. Joshi about the order of the Chief Commissioner prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Central Provinces, the Chief Secretary made a long statement, explaining the circumstances under which the order was made. . . . . The explanation of the Chief Commissioner is a confused and contradictory statement. His order of prohibition must have been, as we have pointed out before, issued in a state of panic. He seems to have an exaggerated opinion of Mrs. Besant's speeches as being inflammatory and as tending to cause violent political agitation. . . . . The explanation discloses, on the whole, a medley of inconsistent pleas and mutually destructive assertions. It also shows the utter lack of touch between the Government and the leaders of the people and the extremely slender pretexts by which important civil rights of the citizens can be taken away by the executive Government in this country."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

New India, of the 14th November, observes :—"The Hon'ble Mr. Joshi put an interpellation to the Central Provinces Government, asking why Mrs.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

Annie Besant had been excluded from the Central Provinces under the Defence of India Act, and elicited from the Hon'ble Mr. Slocock, Chief Secretary, one of the most inept answers that we have seen for a long time. The obvious and most effective answer would have been: 'Mrs. Besant was excluded for reasons which it would not be for the public interests to disclose.' But Mr. Slocock had not in him enough of the 'bold bad boy' to make that unanswerable reply. So he rashly plunged into unreasons. . . . . Mr. Slocock stated that having regard to Mrs. Besant's public utterances on the platform and in the press, the Government thought her visit should be prohibited. Now we understand. The Commissioner claims the right to use a Military Act the prohibit speeches which the law never has touched nor can touch. It was very rash to make such a public confession of the misuse of the power placed in his hands for a special purpose. There has never been the smallest disturbance before, at, or after any lecture given by Mrs. Besant in India. Surely the Government was unwise to give reasons. . . . . Whatever may have been the object of the Commissioner, there is no doubt that he has succeeded in creating a tremendous stir, a violent political and religious agitation, and has immensely increased Mrs. Besant's power and popularity. We thank him.

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 9th, 1916.

The Madras Executive Council.

12. The West Coast Spectator, of the 9th November, observes:—"Dame Rumour is busy. It is said that the Madras Government will import a Mussalman from Bengal or Bombay, we do not suppose from Egypt or Busra, to succeed Sir Sivaswami Ayyar. We refuse to believe this talk, for we cannot conceive of the Local Government going in search of an 'Indian member' like Æsop of old with a lighted candle, when competent men are near by. If they are anxious to placate the Mussalmans, why there is their friend Mr. Ahmad Thambi Marakkayar, if they find Mr. Justice Abdur Rahman not after their own heart."

PEOPLE'S OPINION, Trivandrum, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Writing on this subject, the People's Opinion, of the 11th November, says:—"Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar, the Member of the Madras Executive Council, will retire in February next, after having wasted five years in the Council. No great work stands to his credit or any notable incident in which he espoused the cause of the people as against Anglo-Indian opinion of the orthodox bureaucratic type. The bright hopes entertained when he was called to fill the high office remain absolutely unrealized . . . . . A brilliant lawyer and a public man of some reputation, Sir Sivaswami Ayyar seems to have lost his talents and patriotic fervour the moment he became a Councillor. Had he retired into private life from the Advocate-Generalship, his reputation would certainly not have suffered this set-back."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 11th, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 11th November, remarks:—"The Associated Press sends round a paragraph, which is evidently inspired, that Moulvi Shamsul Huda, the retiring member of the Bengal Executive Council, may probably be brought down to Madras. We must say that this announcement has 'knocked' us down! It would seem that they are very anxious to provide Mr. Huda with a fat and comfortable berth elsewhere, the Lord Chief Justice of Bengal and his companion Judges having strongly protested against the undesirable procedure of translating the 'executive lion' to the fold of the 'judicial lamb'."

"The Associated Press justifies the probable appointment, and quotes the precedent created by the importation of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim; and says that the turn in the Madras Council is now the Moslems'. Assuming that a Moslem should get in, why are they fighting shy of Mr. Justice Rahim and anxious to give Mr. Huda a further lease of official life. Are there not in the Presidency Moslems capable enough to sit in the Council? What about Nawab Sayyid Mahomed Bahadur and Khan Bahadur Aziz-ud-din? From all these beating about the bush, special pleadings and mysterious talks, we gather that another surprise is in store for us."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 17th, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 17th November, writes:—"The Associated Press Agency sent us last week a long message from Calcutta containing a laboured argument for the appointment of Sir Shamsul Huda, the present Indian Member of the Bengal Executive Council, in succession to Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar, as Member of the Madras Executive Council when he vacates his office in February next. . . . . Very few persons in Madras took the news seriously when it was received, but later information from Calcutta from accredited reliable quarters goes to confirm the intelligence, and there are at least good grounds for thinking that strenuous attempts are being made to secure the office of the Indian Member of the Madras Executive Council to Sir Shamsul Huda. We think it would be a grave blunder if such an appointment is made, and it would cause profound dissatisfaction among all classes of people in this Presidency. . . . . The circumstances under which the proposal of the appointment of Sir Shamsul Huda to the Madras Executive Council comes at this time, also show that rather than finding fit men when a vacancy arises for the office, Government goes in quest of a suitable office for a certain person. The sense of such an obligation conferred or to be conferred by the Government, cannot but, on the part of the receiver, be greatly demoralising to him in the efficient discharge of his public duty. There is also no justification whatever, as far as we can see, for importing for the office of Executive Councillor in Madras a gentleman from East Bengal of the not very superior qualifications of Sir Shamsul Huda. It would be an unjust and unmerited aspersion on the claims and qualifications of the persons available in this Presidency to fill the office of Member of the Executive Council. . . . . We are not, however, concerned very much with the previous public record of Sir S. Huda, except to point out that it was not one of such brilliance as to justify his being brought over to Madras as Indian Member of the Executive Council over the heads of all those eligible for that office in this Presidency. He does not also come under the category of a non-official as a large body of enlightened opinion in all parts of the country desires that an aspirant for the office should be. The opinion of public bodies in this Presidency, Hindu and Muhammadan, is that the Indian Member of the Executive Council should be selected from persons available in this Presidency. Among the persons eligible, if from the ranks of the officials, the claims and qualifications of Diwan Bahadur Rajagopala Achariar and Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim as belonging to the Hindu and Muhammadan communities respectively will receive universal recognition. If it is considered that it is now desirable that the Indian Member should be selected from the Muhammadan community, and from the ranks of the non-officials, the name of Nawab Syed Mahmood Bahadur would compel recognition. He belongs to a noble family, and is a man of high character possessing a good record of public service. He has been Sheriff of Madras, President of the Indian National Congress, Member of the Imperial Legislative Council for eleven years, is Joint General Secretary of the Congress, and has shown intelligent, ungrudging and sustained activity in a variety of public causes. Madras is in no dearth of capable men, official or non-official, in every way competent to hold the office of Member of the Executive Council, and it would be a slur on its worthy sons as well as a blundering policy, to bring in Sir S. Huda from East Bengal."

13. The West Coast Spectator, of the 9th November, writes:—"It is widely rumoured that the Government of the United Provinces will follow the example of Bombay and the Central Provinces and prohibit Mrs. Besant from entering their territory in view of the forthcoming session of the congress, at which the Home Rule question is likely to excite a heated controversy. Sir James Mesten is credited with sound commonsense, and it is not likely that he will be carried away by panic. In fact, he is stern but just, strong but reasonable. We would certainly be immensely surprised if His Honour is frightened, by the frail old lady, into putting an illegal Act (pace Lord Loreburn) into operation against her."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 9th, 1916.

Theosophical Convention, whereat theosophists gather from all parts of the world, and is to attend the National Congress as a member of the All-India Congress Committee—to which, by the way, she has just been re-elected for the year 1917. Sir James Meston is too sensible a man to make such a blunder. We are none the less grateful to the big Lucknow meeting, in which Hindus and Mussalmans joined in protest against Sir Benjamin Robertson's unwise action."

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 11th, 1916.

14. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 11th November:—"One of the remaining non-official nominated seats in the Madras Legislative Council has been filled up by the nomination of the Kumar Raja of Bobbili. The Kumar Raja may be a very able and enlightened young nobleman, but we have to ask to represent what special interests he has been nominated. The zamindars and landlords other than zamindars are fully represented in the Council. The power of nomination is vested in the Governor to equalise representation—for the representation of minorities and special interests, and we must state that the nomination under reference does not satisfy this condition."

The Madras Legislative Council.

New India, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

15. New India, of the 14th November, states:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Burn is said to have stated in the United Provinces Legislative Council that in the interests of 'public and administrative efficiency' it is necessary that a number of high officials in India should spend a part of the year at the hill stations. While there is nothing new in that statement, it shows how the Government of this country is still determined to cling to a stock argument which has ceased to convince the public—including a large section of Anglo-India. It was only a few days ago, when Lord Carmichael pointed out the delay and dislocation caused in administrative work by reason of the exodus to Darjeeling, that the Englishman, commenting on that declaration, exposed the folly of the migration in very strong language, pointing out that any commercial firm doing its business in that way would be bankrupt in no time. . . . . When public opinion in India demands the stoppage of the exodus, it does not intend that our high officials should not visit the hills at all. No one will stand in the way of their spending a few days now and then on the cool heights of Simla or Ooty; all that is demanded is that the efficiency and the usefulness of the administration for a part of the year be not curtailed by the transfer of whole departments to hill stations; and also that this poor country may not be saddled annually with a large expenditure which she cannot bear without great strain."

High officials and hill stations.

New India, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

16. New India, of the 14th November, has the following:—"We are very sorry to see that Mr. Lionel Curtis is travelling with one of educated India's most deadly foes, Sir Valentine Chirol. It bodes ill for Mr. Curtis' attitude towards India, already none too favourable. They come from Simla to stay at Government House, Allahabad. Sir Valentine Chirol is ever a welcome guest of the highest officials, and his fatal influence distorts their view of India. That one of the leaders of the Round Table is seeing India under such auspices will greatly increase her difficulties in winning her place in the empire."

Stormy petrels.

New India, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

17. The following appears in New India of the 14th November:—

"Set free.

"The value of the Bombay High Court judgment was seen in Bombay last night, when Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak delivered an admirable address to the Bombay National Union. The advice given, the controlled enthusiasm inspiring it, the practical suggestions made, all lead us to 'thank God that we have a Bombay High Court.' Its decision has been a blow to the Willingdon administration, but it is a pillar to the 'Government established by law'—the Crown and the British connexion—for that rests on justice."

Mr. B. G. Tilak and Home Rule for India.

18. Writing under the heading "Using Commonsense," New India, of the 14th November, says:—"A very common juvenile offence in London is petty larceny. Lads pilfer parcels from vans, taking advantage of the darkness which now prevails in the London streets.

The Boy Scout movement.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

"The youths pretend they are British troops ambuscading German convoys bringing supplies to the front." "Good," says the Chief Scout [Sir Robert Baden Powell]; "we will make them British troops. They shall have convoys and ambuscading beyond the dreams of realism." It is the only way. The police and special constables, however far their powers are extended, can only suppress. But high spirits are too dangerous to suppress. They are also too valuable. So in the interests of the State and the offender alike, let them have new direction.

"Sir Robert says 'that the worst hooligan makes the best Scout: he only needs direction for his adventurous energy, and attractive pursuits to fill a void.' That is very true, but Sir Robert is a local, not an Imperial patriot, so he will not allow any but white boys to enter his Scouts. We in India feel that 'high spirits are too dangerous to suppress. They are also too valuable.' But 'we' who feel this are not the Government, and the Government and Sir Robert are agreed. The white boys, though thieves, must be saved, says Sir Robert. But the coloured boys, though clean-living, must be dealt with by the police."

19. New India, of the 15th November, writes:—"We are glad that Sir Sivaswami Ayyar has not again been superseded, and that an Indian receives the Vice-Presidentship of the Executive Council. We should be more glad if he had stood up for Indian liberty as a true Indian should have done. As it is, we feel that if this paper is destroyed, if its editor is interned, we shall owe these inroads on Liberty to the weakness of the Indian member of the Council, who is probably rewarded for his weakness rather than for any services to India. Our English rulers know the value of being able to shelter themselves behind an Indian."

The new Vice-President.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 15th, 1916.

20. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 15th November, says:—"We pointed out last week that the latest nomination by Lord Pentland to the office of a Non-official Member of the Local Legislative Council, is not, like some others which have preceded it, of a character to fulfil the purposes for which the power of nomination has been conferred, and that it is not calculated to strengthen the non-official element in the Council. Small and almost negligible as is the influence of that element on the general administration, by the nature of its constitution, and of its functions, Lord Pentland has by some of his acts as President of the Council done more to retard than to promote it . . . . The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar gave notice of a resolution to be moved at the next meeting of the Legislative Council pointing out the desirability of appointing not less than one Indian officer of the Provincial Service in the vacancies that arise in the Membership of the Revenue Board. We understand that the resolution has been disallowed by the President under the rule which empowers him to reject resolutions, the discussion of which would be against public interest. It is incredible to us how the discussion of the resolution can be said to be against public interest. On the other hand, a commonsense view of public interest requires that the Government for its own good name should embrace the opportunity afforded by the moving of the resolution to explain the reasons which have impelled them not to give effect to the explicit declaration and promise of the Government made through its then spokesman Sir Murray Mammick in 1910. It is also strange that a resolution, the discussion of which was not considered to be against public interest in 1910, is now deemed to be so. It is not far fetched to infer under these circumstances that it is found highly inconvenient to allow a discussion of it at present, and a summary rejection of the resolution is the best solution of the difficulty. Another instance in which Lord Pentland has, we learn, exercised his power against popular interests is in withholding permission to the Hon'ble Mr. T. Ranga Achari to introduce a Bill for the better organization and management of village panchayats . . . . When a private member like the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achari comes forward with a Bill, upon such an important subject, it is deserving of more consideration and support from the Government than has been accorded to it by Lord Pentland."

Disallowance of resolutions.

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 16th, 1916.

The costlier telegram.

21. New India, of the 16th November, observes:— "The Government of India have decided to increase the cost of inland telegrams from 6 to 8 annas from the beginning of next month. . . . . The sole reason is the inability of the reduced staff to cope with the traffic, and the Government have adopted the plan of increasing the charges and thus to reduce the amount of work now carried on by the department. The other alternative open to the Government was to increase the staff; and that has not apparently been considered feasible. The result of the Government decision will be to hamper speedy correspondence, i.e., lessen the conveniences of traders and business people; and, secondly, to decrease the income of the Telegraph Department. Thus, in both ways, the decision is unhappy. This is a time when efforts ought to be made to add to the usefulness of the telegraph services, and the present step is in the contrary direction. . . . . It is no uncommon experience of the public in India to find the Government excusing any unhappy act on what was found necessary in England. There is one more repetition of the same phenomenon in the present instance. In England, it is evidently not taken note of, the whole adult manhood had to be mobilised for the war. Had the Government of India any such obstacle in the way of its strengthening the Telegraph department? Then, again, in England, the host of new duties have been imposed on the Government by the war. Where do we find any such burden in India? The raising of the telegraph charges was an inconvenience which had to be put up with along with others which are easily avoidable in India, but not in England. Evidently all these considerations have been ignored by the drafters of the Government decision. They seem almost to think that because the people of England have to put up with an inconvenience, we in India should not murmur to have it though it were unnecessary or avoidable here. Is that justifiable?"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 17th, 1916.

India's military resources.

22. New India, of the 17th November, states:—"We published yesterday a Reuter's message stating that Mr. Chamberlain was corresponding with the Government of India on the question of developing the military resources of India voluntarily. The only interpretation that this statement is capable of is that the question raised by Mr. Churchill—raising a large Indian army to take part in the culminating shock in 1917—is under consideration. In other words, the authorities have given up their idea, at least temporarily, of brushing aside that question as impossible of solution. If that be so, the Government are on the right track; and we congratulate them on their wisdom in recognising the needs of the situation. Such a change of mind was inevitable; and if it did not come earlier, it was due, perhaps, to the failure of the civil authorities to recognise what an offensive movement means in the present war. . . . . If an army of ten or fifteen divisions were to be raised in India, there will certainly not be sufficient European officers, even if Eurasians or Anglo-Indians be utilised in their place. Hence if a large Indian army were to be raised at once, the officers will have to be largely children of soil. That must be the question now engaging the attention of the Government of India and the Imperial authorities, and we hope they will consider it in a statesmanlike way. . . . . The Government are, no doubt, aware that Eurasian officers will be disliked even more than Europeans by a large section of educated Indians unless they, too, are admitted to commissioned rank. And without the co-operation of educated India, the chances of raising a huge army here are very poor. We are confident that this aspect of the problem is receiving the careful consideration of the Government. For whatever may be said by arm-chair critics here and there, no large movement in India is possible to which the educated section of the people are hostile. Unless the Government recognise this, we do not think their scheme has any appreciable chance of success."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 17th, 1916.

The Congress and Moslem League scheme for Home Rule for India.

23. New India, of the 17th November, writes:—"Pessimists abound in India. The conditions under which we are educated and in which we live tend to make cowards of most of us. The operation of the various repressive measures loom somewhat large in our horizon. As a result of this combined action, Indians have lost much of that cheery optimism which their faiths enjoin. Their general outlook on life is deprecatory of almost everything new, and efforts always have to be made to raise hopes and enthusiasm. . . . . The feeling has grown in the country that Hindus and Muslims, Brahmans and non-Brahmans, all are children of the one mother. We must still work for the further realisation of that same true principle. And now, at length, after eleven months of work—and we will admit there was some waiting—the two great national bodies have put forward their joint scheme of post-war reforms which we published yesterday. . . . . In the meantime the moral should be pointed out: Keep on with your agitation till everyone is convinced; do not mind opposition here and there, but steadily persist in your noble work, and by the time we all meet at Lucknow the popular feeling and will, will be so thoroughly illuminated by popular intelligence that the united voice of the people of India will rent the bureaucratic air and pass on till it is heard by the great British people whose representatives sit at Westminster. And then India will obtain what she wants as her just right. Work hard therefore, go to the Congress at Lucknow, there make your presence felt, and during the coming days 'Worship the mother'—Vande Mataram."

IV.—NATIVE STATES.

PEOPLE'S OPINION, Trivandrum, Nov. 8th, 1916.

Compulsory recruitment in Travancore.

24. The People's Opinion, of the 8th November, writes:—"Our Quilon contemporary, the Malayalee, draws the attention of the authorities to a very undesirable state of matters in the Kottarakara and adjoining taluks. It is the oppression and extortion practised by the subordinate Revenue officials in those places under the cover of what they call Alpiditham or compulsory recruitment for service at the battle front. Our contemporary vouches for the existence of this unjust and unjustifiable form of official oppression, on the strength of local enquiries made by its representative and appeals earnestly for the interference of the higher authorities to allay public discontent and dispel popular dismay. The sum and substance of the complaint is that the petty Revenue officials go to outlying villages, catch hold of the ignorant villagers and threaten them with immediate transportation to the battle front. To get out of the clutches of these inexorable officers they are forced to pay down a fixed amount which might secure them liberty and freedom from further molestation. On account of this unscrupulous rapacity of the revenue underlings many a homestead has been practically deserted. A few womenfolk and children seem to be the only dwellers who stick to their houses, while their earning and working members have fled and taken refuge in the adjoining hills, probably thinking that they would receive kinder treatment from the brute creation there than what they received at the hands of their fellowmen. We sincerely trust that the Diwan who, will be the last to tolerate the existence of popular discontent, will institute searching inquiries into the matter and bring the culprits to book."

KARNATAKA, Bangalore City, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Theosophy in Mysore Schools.

25. The Karnataka, of the 11th November, has the following:—"A Mysore correspondent wrote in New India of the 9th instant:—'The Inspector-General of Education in Mysore has permitted Mr. K. Narahari Sastri, Branch Inspector of Theosophical Societies, to lecture to students of Government and aided institutions in the State on religion and morality. He has issued a circular to all the teachers of the Government and aided schools to give him all reasonable facilities in the matter. The Government of Mysore ordered years ago that religion should be taught in all the Government schools in the State. For want of competent teachers the work is not being done very successfully. It is hoped that the lectures of Mr. K. Narahari Sastri will give life to the cause of religious and moral education in the State. The Theosophical Societies are grateful.'

"If the above be a correct statement of facts, we must hasten to enter our most emphatic protest against the injudicious and uncalled for action of our distinguished Inspector-General of Education. . . . . He has absolutely no right, we think, to let the course of education in the State be influenced by his own private faith, or fancy, or predilection. If there are in the State persons who, like Messrs. Karpur Srinivasa Rao and H. Narasinga Rao, fear that the times are out of joint, and that the ascendancy of Kali amongst modern young men can only be arrested by inoculating them with as large doses of theology and sacerdotalism as could be made available—there are others, perhaps, less known to fame, and certainly less garrulous, but by no means less numerous or less entitled to be heard, to whom religion is too sacred a thing to be paraded anywhere and everywhere and who would not concede to any except persons of their own choice the privilege of teaching it to their children. . . . . In spite of the recent remarkable political developments, people have not forgotten in what light theosophy and its illustrious head came to be regarded a couple of years ago, especially in this part of India; and while we have not a word to say against theosophy as it is defined officially, and while we have nothing but gratitude for the work it has done to promote education and to foster the religious spirit—we cannot say, and no honest theosophist would himself claim that theosophy has become acceptable in every sense to all orthodox Hindus. This plainly being the case, with what justification could the Inspector-General, not only permit, but also encourage by means of a special Departmental circular, the lecturing campaign of a theosophist?"

VERNACULAR PAPERS.

I.—Foreign Politics.

26. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 14th November, writes:—The French and the Russians have abandoned the drink habit. But the English have not done so as yet. Their loss from this source is estimated at 18 crores and 20 lakhs of pounds sterling per annum. It can scarcely be proper during war time to spend on intoxicants at the rate of 50 lakhs of pounds sterling per day. The use of these drugs, except when they are rendered absolutely necessary for the preservation of health, is productive of great harm both from a hygienic and from an economic point of view. If this unnecessary expenditure should be reduced, there would not only be less dearth of funds for the purchase of articles of food such as wheat and sugar but there would also be more men available for the front. The complete abandonment of all luxuries is an invaluable asset to the individual as well as to the nation.

27. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 14th November, in its news columns writes:—In all Allied countries there is an outcry against the continuance of the war and against the compulsory recruitment of menfor the front.

28. Referring to the keen contest between Dr. Wilson and Mr. Hughes for the Presidentship of the United States of America, the Keralodayam, of the 14th November, points out that though so far as the war is concerned, it is immaterial whether Dr. Wilson or Mr. Hughes is elected as President, as the Americans care for nothing else than making money, yet the success of the latter is more desirable, as in that case it may be hoped that he may do something in this respect.

29. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 19th November, writes:—The present Government of Egypt is under the suzerainty of Great Britain whose blessings are more obvious than the noonday sun. Husain Kamil Pasha the Sultan of Egypt, in the course of a lengthy conversation with a correspondent of the Associated Press, has expressed his satisfaction with the importance of British suzerainty.

The Sultan of Egypt and the British suzerainty.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Nov. 19th, 1916.

The editor, in giving a translation of an extract from the conversation, hopes that the present Sultan of Egypt will establish a model of excellent administration by spreading education in the country under the suzerainty and guidance of the British Government.

30. The Jaridah-i-Rozgar, of the 13th November, writes on the authority of the official report published at Rome, dated 22nd October 1916.

A proof of the deplorable condition of Austria.

Jaridah-i-Rozgar, Madras, Nov. 13th, 1916.

The telegraphic information which reaches us of the numerous Austrian soldiers captured since the commencement of the present war and the conflicting orders issued by Austria directing boys under age and old men, who were previously excluded from Military service, to join the colours, clearly shows that Austria is ruined and her military strength greatly reduced.

The editor quotes several authorities in support of the above statement, and refers to the assassination of the Austro-Hungarian Premier as the result of the shortage of food-stuffs. He concludes by stating that the people of Austria are very anxious for peace.

(b) Courts.

Swadesamitran, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

32. The Swadesamitran, of the 10th November, hails with satisfaction the decision of the Judges of the Bombay High Court setting aside the order of the Poona District Magistrate binding over Mr. Tilak in a security of rupees twenty-thousand, and observes:—Our readers cannot but note the difference in the views expressed by the High Court Judges in Madras and Bombay. The decision of the Bombay High Court can be said to have removed one of the dangers to which one serving his country was hitherto subjected. The people have a legal right to criticise executive acts with a view to bring about reforms in administrative methods. It has been admitted by Lord Hardinge and the Bombay and the Madras Governments that there is nothing wrong in wishing for Swaraj or speaking about it. It is quite natural that those constitutionally speaking and writing about Swaraj may use an objectionable word or two now and then owing to carelessness or other causes. If these words alone are to be picked out, without any thought being bestowed upon the intention of the writer or speaker and the general effect upon the people of his speeches and writings and he is prosecuted, no one will venture to come out to work for political reforms. This state of affairs will prove injurious to both the people and the Government. The statement of the Bombay Judges that a speech should be considered as a whole and not piecemeal before it is condemned has removed a great fear from the mind of those engaged in political work. We hope the Law officers of the Government will adopt this principle hereafter.

Mr. Tilak's appeal.

The Bombay Government should have issued their order against Mrs. Besant with the same motive with which it launched security proceedings against Mr. Tilak. Now that the Bombay High Court has declared that the conclusions of the Bombay Government were wrong, we hope that it will reconsider the order passed against Mrs. Besant and cancel it.

Vidya Bhanu, Kumpta, Nov. 13th, 1916.

The Vidya Bhanu, of the 13th November, reproduces the above article.

Prapanchamitran, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Prapanchamitran, of the 10th November, says:—We congratulate Mr. Tilak, the Indian nationalists and ourselves on the success of his appeal. We hail the British sense of justice which has been the natural birthright of the British people and which has now been indicated by the Bombay Judges. Though the Indians are aware of numerous defects in the executive administration, they believe that British justice will never fail and decisions like the present one go to strengthen this belief.

Lokopakari, Madras, Nov. 13th, 1916.

Referring to the same subject, the Lokopakari, of the 13th November, observes that the decision of the Bombay High Court will be a lesson to the Magistrates who act against law and the Executive officials of the Bombay Presidency.

Mysore Star, Mysore, Nov. 12th, 1916.

The Tilak appeal case.

In a leading article giving a brief summary of the arguments on either side at the hearing of Mr. Tilak's appeal against the security order, the Mysore Star, of the 12th November, says:—The Supreme Tribunals in India give us practical proof from time to time of the high regard which the British administration has for popular liberty. In this case, too, the Bombay High Court has upheld the tradition of British justice and thereby earned the lasting gratitude of all classes of Indians. We rejoice with the rest of India at this vindication of Tilak's loyalty to British throne.

In a leading article on the same subject, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 15th November, likewise hails with joy the news of the judgment setting aside the security order and observes:—The overwhelming force of the traditions of British justice has thus succeeded in removing the bridle that had been put upon Mr. Tilak's tongue. He is now as free as ever to proceed with his service to the motherland. The Bombay High Court has now laid down the principle that even if an isolated word or sentence is objectionable, a speech, the tenor of which is, on the whole, loyal, ought not to be condemned. Not only Maharastra but the whole of India is in raptures over this vindication of Tilak's loyalty. Congratulatory messages are pouring in. While likewise joining in the chorus of these good wishes, we tender, at the same time, our heartfelt thanks to the Bombay High Court for constructing this first step in the ladder for the attainment of Indian liberty.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore City, Nov. 15th, 1916.

Referring to the decision of the Bombay High Court in the "Tilak Security case", the Manorama, of the 10th November, observes that the success of Mr. Tilak should be regarded as a great national victory, and that the Indians are indebted to those Europeans who, having regard to the sentiments of the Indians, decide cases justly and wisely.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Patrika, of the 11th November, points out that the decision will give universal satisfaction in India.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 11th, 1916.

(d) Education.

33. The Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 15th November, writes:—In a very interesting speech on the subject of examinations, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter remarked that examinations at the present day were destructive of the student's intellectual powers and enthusiasm for education. His Lordship does not, of course, say that they should be abolished altogether as in the case of the American and European Universities. As a matter of fact, in the good old days when boys read under their gurus according to the Aryan system of education these examinations did not stand in the way of their love of learning and acquirement of culture. In America each and every boy capable of grasping the lectures of his professors is promoted to the higher classes. It is only the Madras University authorities that hate teachers who liberally promote students. With them feats of memory, such as remembering the dates of historical events and the sections of codes are of more importance than real acquisition of knowledge. In the case of law examinations for instance, even with books the question papers may be made sufficiently taxing. But that is a thing which can never be dreamt of in the case of the Madras University. Their examiners are totally impervious to such ideas. They do not know that every little leniency shown to the students who appear for their examinations means their rise in the world and with that is closely bound up the future progress and prosperity of our motherland.

The nature of the present-day examinations.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Nov. 15th, 1916.

34. The Qaumi Report, of the 8th November, writes:—The day before yesterday a resolution was passed at the Educational Conference held at Vāniyambādi that separate schools for Mussalmans should be demanded. The resolution is as moderate as it is reasonable, but this cry of the conference is making our compatriot New India uneasy, for in its issue of the 4th instant it writes—

"New India's mistake."

"We admit we cannot support this demand. The principle of separate Government schools should be broken as far as possible. This enthusiastic desire is apparent everywhere."

The Qaumi Report adds we do not know why our esteemed contemporary is unable to admit an essential Mussalman demand. If its inability to do is due to the fact that it intends to efface us by absorbing us in Hindu nationality, we are unable to accept its logic.

QAUMI REPORT, Madras, Nov. 8th, 1916.

Our system of education is absolutely different from that of the Hindus. We do not wish to publish here the advantage or disadvantage derived by our pupils in schools, but we will certainly say this much, viz., that our worthy contemporary has had no experience of Mussalman education, and it is committing a serious blunder in drawing its logical conclusion with regard to ourselves.

It knows full well that the Hindu College at Benares, the Khalsa College at Lahore, and Pachaiyappa's College at Madras are separate institutions in which Hindus alone are admitted. Can our learned contemporary, New India, assure us if the separate principle is responsible for any loss to these colleges? If not and certainly not it is, why should a principle which is beneficial to our Hindu brethren not afford any benefit to us poor Mussalmans? Perhaps our respected contemporary does not approve of Government establishing separate schools. We have already stated that this logic is entirely one-sided. The assertion, that if separate schools belong to Government they will prove harmful while private schools will be beneficial, cannot be maintained.

It is very regrettable that our respected contemporary New India, in its love of, and prejudice for, Hindus, makes offensive attacks on most of Mussalman rights. Would that it had suggested to its friends to demolish their schools and colleges and to re-establish them on mixed principles before offering us friendly counsel.

It very sympathetically suggests to us to demand more scholarships instead of raising this question. Supposing we get more scholarships the question is how many schools and colleges are there that can keep their doors open for Mussalmans? Hindu schools and colleges are absolutely prohibited places for us. Government colleges cannot help themselves in the matter, but Missionary schools and colleges where we have to waste a lot of time contrary to our faith are alive. The only way to get out of these difficulties is through the resolution moved by the conference. It is hoped that our worthy contemporary will read the secret of the resolution in the light of its real significance.

(e) Local and Municipal.

SASILEKHA, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

Local self-government.

35. The Sasilekha, of the 10th November, says that the present system of local self-government has failed in its object inasmuch as the Presidents of local boards who are officers of the Government, wield every authority themselves the members nominated by the Government nodding assent in order to please them. It suggests that the members of local boards should all be elected by the rate-payers, that the elected members should have the power to elect the Presidents, and that the Collector or the Government should interfere only when the boards commit serious mistakes. There should be a panchayat for each big village, a municipality for each town, and a taluk board for each revenue taluk. The district boards should be abolished, says the paper. Committees of members should be formed with power to fix income and expenditure and to decide as to the establishment of schools and hospitals. Only then can there be any real local self-government in India.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Municipal elections and objection petitions.

36. The Andhraprakasika, of the 11th November, suggests that to avoid the unnecessary submission of petitions objecting to municipal elections, the Government will do well to require the petitioners to deposit a certain sum in the Collector's office when submitting the petitions, and says that such an order will save the authorities a good deal of trouble.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Nov. 8th, 1916.

The Malabar District Board.

37. In continuing its comments on the administration of the Malabar District Board, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 8th November, also draws attention to the necessity of utilising the large surplus at its disposal for useful purposes, such as improvement of sanitation, construction of bridges, etc., as well as to the desirability of increasing the number of hospitals and dispensaries in the district.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Nov. 13th, 1916.

The Malabar District Board.

Referring to the report on the administration of the Malabar District Board, the Lokaprakasam, of the 13th November, has the following in English:—Peculiar interest attaches to the Administration Reports of our District Boards and Municipalities, the former of which, working mostly under official guidance and supervision and having at times the requisite resources at their command, are more often expected to reach the standard of perfection. Few of these institutions, indeed, work in perfect harmony to the complete satisfaction of the official and the non-official public, but were a plebescite be taken we will readily find that the majority like our own are not working in such a manner as to give entire satisfaction to the generality of the public. Elsewhere we publish the correspondence that passed between the President and Mr. Mannarghaut Mupil Nayar, a substantial landlord of the district, and the attitude of the President from the way he has answered Mr. Nayar and behaved towards the planters is open to serious question. We are badly in need of gentlemen like Mr. Mannarghaut Mupil Nayar in the Board, if it should prove more useful to the public at large. . . . . The good work done smoothly by taluk boards and unions and the commendable interest taken in local affairs by private members come in for good testimony at the hands of the President, who opines that there is little scope for increasing the unions, because of no real demand therefor. Those who are well acquainted with the conservative nature of the Malabaris as well as the opposition presented by the interested few at the time when proposals were made to constitute Ponnani and Badagara into unions, will certainly refuse to be persuaded by the President when he says that there is little scope for the expansion of local self-government in Malabar. . . . . The dangers attendant on the alarming and unsatisfactory nature of the ferry services in Malabar and especially in the northern portion of it, are such that peremptory action in the direction (bridge construction) is urgently called for. The expenditure on roads amounted to Rs. 4·90 lakhs, and they are reported to be in good order. Though a few village roads were opened in the review year, rural communications admit of much more improvement. The medical aid given by the Boards through the seven hospitals and dispensaries they maintain is very poor when we take into consideration the density of the population and the extensive jurisdiction it has. The almost neglected or scanty medical aid given to the fair sex must be one of the main causes for increased infantile mortality. That, of the total allotment under the head, only a sum of Rs. 5,600 was spent for sanitation, is, indeed, very surprising. It is a pity that rural sanitation should be so sadly neglected. Towards the end of the year there was also an unspent balance of about rupees one lakh, out of the provincial grant for water-supply. There are innumerable villages and townlets wherein a good supply of potable drinking water could not be had, to which we cannot but call the attention of the Board. A sum of Rs. 1·89 lakhs has been spent for education, and the Board comes in for good mention in regard to its policy under this head. Though some of the school buildings have been condemned some new ones were completed during the year, and others are in progress. There are very many other interesting items in the report under review calling for special mention, but space forbids our dealing with them here. The report, on the whole, does credit to the official President upon which we also congratulate him.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Government officials in the taluk boards.

38. The Kerala Patrika, of the 11th November, points out that seven out of the eight Tahsildars in the Salem district are members of taluk boards, and observes that the presence of Government officials in the local boards stands in the way of non-official members thereof expressing their opinions boldly and freely, and that it thus frustrates the very object with which they have been established.

(g) Forests.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

The Forest Research Institute.

39. The Andhrapatrika, of the 11th November, says:—By an examination of the work turned out by the several sections of the Forest Research Institute, it will be found that the Chemical expert who is an Indian has done very meritorious work. We are unable to understand why he has not been appointed to the Imperial Service and given equal status with the other experts working in connection with the institute. If the head of the Financial section be also an Indian, he will work keeping the advancement of India in his view. In the great industrial age which is to come, our forests will certainly be of very great help. If Indian interests are not guarded, the raw forest produce will leave the shores of India as does the other produce of land at present. We urge that steps should at once be taken to see that the institute carries on its work having the interests of the Indians at heart.

SAMPAD ABHYUDAYA, Mysore, Nov. 13th, 1916.

Forest administration in Coorg.

40. A correspondent of the Sampad Abhyudaya, of the 13th November, in a lengthy letter purporting to ask for information regarding village forests, their administration and the merits and demerits of the system, complains about the rigour and stringency of the Arms Act and the Forest Regulations of Coorg and the devastation of fields by wild beasts. The writer remarks that the Government seem to love the forests and their denizens more than their subjects and their property and that this state of things is probably explained by the fact that the officers at the head of the administration are men who come from a distance of several thousand miles and totally unacquainted with the language, condition and requirements of the people of this country and who soon come to be guided by their satellites by the time they acquire the necessary local knowledge and that Coorg is very unfortunate in not having any of those popular organisations such as those existing elsewhere in order to acquaint the people with the wants and wishes of the people.

SOWRASHTRABHIMANI, Salem, July 1916.

The South Indian Railway and third-class passengers.

41. The Sowrashtrabhimani, * for July 1916, dwells upon the hardships suffered by third-class passengers on this railway, and invites the special attention of the authorities to the great inconvenience caused to the people taking train at Madura by tickets being refused to them for through trains on the ground of want of accommodation. This paper suggests that the detention of a number of passengers in each station on this ground can be avoided by the Railway authorities running one or two additional trains to carry third-class passengers alone.

(j) Salt and Abkāri.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Salt department.

42. In reviewing the report on the administration of the Salt Department for the year 1915–16, the Manorama, of the 10th November, observes that salt being as essential to the people as water, it is the duty of the Government to provide them with the necessary quantity of it instead of limiting its supply by special laws and thus making it dear.

KERALA PATRIKA, Calicut, Nov. 11th, 1916.

The Salt-tax.

43. The Kerala Patrika, of the 11th November, also draws attention to the hardship to the people caused by the salt tax, about which, however, there is no use of saying anything, till the Government are in a position to increase their revenues by other means.

(k) General.

44. In dwelling upon the essential requirements for India to advance industrially, the Sowrashtrabhimani, * for July 1916, lays stress upon the encouragement and assistance of the Government as a main factor in the improvement of new industries in the country.

SOWRASHTRABHIMANI, Salem, July 1916.

The industrial advancement of India.

45. In commenting upon the report of the Department of Industries in this Presidency for last year, the Swadesamitran, of the 6th November, says:—This report shows that no progress has been made in any direction on account of the war. All the same, the department has consumed Rs. 2,24,000. From the time Mr. Chatterton left this department, it cannot be said to have been doing good work. But the work turned out by the same department in the United Provinces is very satisfactory. While the Dyeing expert in Madras declared that it was not possible to prepare good dyes from the materials available in India, the same expert in the United Provinces has declared it to be quite possible and has even begun manufacturing it. Another step in the right direction, which the Government of Sir James Meston has taken is to render pecuniary help to a rising industry. We hope the Madras Government will make a similar move soon.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 6th, 1916.

Industrial advancement in the Madras Presidency and the United Provinces.

46. The Swadesamitran, of the 6th November, endorses the view expressed by some of the witnesses before the Industrial Commission that an Industrial Bank is very necessary in India, if she is to improve her condition, and observes:—This suggestion is already being worked out in England and the lines on which such a bank should be run are now being considered there. The main reason why India has not been advancing industrially, in spite of the abundant quantity of raw products which she possesses, is the poverty of the people as well as their ignorance in industrial matters. It is the duty of the Government to create in the people the capacity to carry on industries and also to provide them with funds in order to enable them to utilise this capacity. It cannot plead want of funds for this purpose. A good portion of the revenue of the country is kept in reserve in the Provincial Banks like the Madras Bank, without any interest. The business of these banks helps only the export and import trade of the foreign countries. So the Government cannot grudge to give the same kind of assistance to an Industrial Bank. This bank should have branches in every important town in the country and they should advance money to industrial concerns established in these towns subject to certain conditions. If a bank containing Government money also should advance funds to industrial concerns, the Indian capitalists will boldly come forward to invest their money in such concerns. Thus the starting of an Industrial Bank in India on the same lines on which it is proposed to be done in England will have the double advantage of the Government indirectly rendering pecuniary help to Indian industries and also encouraging the people to invest money therein. We hope the members of the Industrial Commission will support this proposal.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 6th 1916.

An Industrial Bank for India.

47. Referring to the report of the Survey Department for 1915–16, the Swadesamitran, of the 8th November, says:—It is now 58 years since this department came into existence and yet the survey work is still continuing, and there is no knowing when it will be finished. The Government appointed a committee in 1914 to advise it in matters connected with this department and the members of the committee, after travelling throughout India and inquiring several witnesses, stated that the remaining work of survey could be finished in 25 years with 5 separate parties and that one party should be abolished immediately. But the Government was not prepared to act on this recommendation and decided to continue all the parties on the ground that some of them were necessary to survey the zamindaries. The advantages derived from this survey work are not after all quite certain. Many places surveyed once have to be re-surveyed and the money spent upon the original survey naturally becomes wasted. It is this re-surveying of lands already surveyed that is dragging on the work of the department. It is stated in the report that the income of the Government from land revenue has now increased by twelve million rupees and that this is due to the settlement operations. This may be true. But it may be noted that the revenue will naturally increase if the assessment is increased without any survey being done. We are not against the work of survey. It is no doubt necessary. But we think it is not necessary to maintain six parties for this purpose. There is another point to which we will draw the attention of the authorities. The Survey Department has now existed for some years, and as the Survey Committee has insisted upon lands being surveyed before every settlement, there will be no possibility of abolishing this department. What is the meaning, then, of the officers and the establishment of this department being treated as temporary men? The Survey Committee seems to have recommended the confirmation of the officers so as to make them eligible for pension. But the committee was not for extending this concession to the establishment. It is the fact that service in this department is not permanent, that keeps back capable men from entering it and it is because men having very little education are employed in the subordinate service that the work of survey has often to be done again. Now that this department has become practically a permanent one, it will be advantageous to confirm the establishment also and attract capable men into this service. There is one peculiar feature about the report of last year. While the expenditure per acre for survey was 0–3–8, 0–3–7 and 0–2–9 respectively in the South Arcot, Trichinopoly and Madura districts, it was 0–7–0 in the Tanjore district. This difference is attributed to a higher rate of wages prevailing in the Māyavaram taluk. We doubt if this would have caused such a great difference. As this expenditure will be ultimately collected from the mirasdars, it is the duty of the Government to see that they are not burdened with unnecessary extra expense.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 8th, 1916.

The system of Government nomination to the Legislative Council.

48. Adverting to the nomination of the Kumara Raja of Bobbili to the local Legislative Council, the Swadesamitran, of the 8th November, observes:—As we do not know in what capacity the Kumara Raja has been nominated, we take it that it is in recognition of his position. We have to come to the same conclusion regarding some other nominations also which have been made by Lord Pentland. We can quote the nomination of the Archbishop of Madras and the Prince of Arcot as instances in point. The power of nominating non-officials to the Council was given to the Governor evidently to enable him to safeguard the interests of communities which were not represented in the council and to take into it eminent non-officials, who by their education and intelligence would render valuable help. So the nomination of non-officials without any reference to the above principle can never be considered to be a desirable move. We cannot say that Lord Pentland fully realised the intention of the legislature in making the nominations noted above. He has, perhaps, forgotten his Liberal principles after he came to India. The nominations made by Lord Pentland this time to the local Legislative Council give room to the impression that the educated classes have been studiously avoided. We cannot believe that a statesman belonging to the Liberal Party can have acted with this narrow view. We may point out, however, that as the existing constitution of the Legislative Council makes it possible for even a Liberal statesman to act like this, it is very necessary to change the rules governing this constitution.

49. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th November, writes:—We cannot say that considering the expenditure incurred by this department last year, there has been a proportionate improvement in agriculture, though the Revenue Board and the Government think that the department had done very good work. The excellence of the work of this department should be judged from the benefits it has conferred upon the agriculturists. We do appreciate the efforts made by the department to convince the agriculturists of the efficacy of single seed planting. But this system has not been adopted by many yet. It may be due to the clinging of the Indian agriculturist to old ways. But it is also due to his not having been made to see directly the advantages of the new system. If the Government takes over a lease of 10 to 20 cents of land in each village and demonstrates this system of planting to the villagers, it will be adopted by the agriculturists to a larger extent. This department has also done some useful work in improving the cotton cultivation in the country. Beyond these two things, the researches and experiments made by the department have not resulted in any material advantage.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 9th, 1916.

The work of the Agricultural department in 1915–16.

50. Referring to the news communicated by the Associated Press Agency that there is a proposal to appoint Sir Shamshul Huda to the Local Executive Council to succeed Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar, the Swadesamitran, of the 9th November, writes:—Beyond the fact that this news agency has always been communicating nothing but correct news, there is no other guarantee to make us believe this information. We cannot believe, without sufficient grounds, that the Government of India and the Secretary of State will attach greater importance to the providing of an appointment to a retiring official than to the safeguarding of the interests of the people. But as a responsible news agency has given currency to this rumour our representatives and associations should lose no time in raising their voice against it. We do not object to the choice falling on a Muhammadan this time; but the fact that one is a Muhammadan cannot by itself befit him for appointment to the Council. The successor of the Hon'ble Mr. Sivaswami Ayyar should have an idea of the local conditions and a sympathy for the people here. We hope that this rumour is unfounded.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 9th, 1916.

The successor of the Hon'ble Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar.

Adverting to the same news, the Hindu Nesan, of the 10th November, observes:—The vacancy in the local Executive Council should be given only to an Indian having an experience of this Province, and it should, on no account, go to a man of another Province. Taking it for granted that the choice should fall on a Muhammadan this time, it cannot be said that there are not men here having a knowledge of the local conditions and fit to be a member of the Executive Council. It is really curious that, without considering these things, the Associated Press Agency should have taken the gratuitous work of providing an appointment for Sir Shamshul Huda.

HINDU NESAN, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

51. The Andhraprakasika, of the 11th November, says:—If the Government wish to respect public opinion and appoint a non-official to succeed the Hon'ble Sir Sivaswami Ayyar, they will do well to appoint either the Hon'ble Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao Pantulu or Rao Bahadur Kesava Pillai. If they do not see their way to do so, the next best thing for them to do will be to appoint the Hon'ble Justice Abdur Rahim as the Indian member of the Council, although he is an official for his knowledge of public affairs and his ability and skill are undoubtedly unparalleled.

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

The office of Indian member of the Madras Executive Council.

52. The Swadesamitran, of the 9th November, reports:—Sir Rabindrnath Tagore to have declined an invitation from Canada to deliver a series of lectures on the ground that he would not set his foot in a land where the Indians were treated badly.

PRAPANCHAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

Stray notes.

53. The correspondent of the Prapanchamitran, under the nom-de-plume of Narada, writes as follows in the issue of the 10th November:—In Denmark, six out of the eight members of the Cabinet are connected with the press. How can the people then expect any harm from that Government? When I think of this, my heart yearns for a similar system of Government for this land of Barada. May the Almighty bless it.

In reply to a question from a representative of the Ceylonese whether Ceylon could not be brought under the Indian administration, the Hon'ble Mr. P. Ramanathan of the Ceylon Legislative Council seems to have stated among other things that the people of Ceylon were now enjoying certain privileges which the British Indians had not. Alas! We Indians here have not even the rights which the people of Ceylon have and even they do not like to mingle with us! Oh! Land of Barada! Should you be condemned like this by every one?

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

The Madras Mail and Mr. Tilak.

54. Referring to the statement of the Madras Mail that half-measures would not do in the case of men like Mr Tilak and that the action taken by the executive should be a swift and crushing one, the Swadesamitran, of the 11th November, observes;—It is curious that the Madras Mail had stopped short of advocating "crushing executive action" in the case of Mr. Tilak without indicating the nature of that action. Some years back, when Lala Rajpat Rai was deported, there were numerous questions in Parliament on the subject and a member asked why Lajpat Rai should not be shot. Immediately, the Secretary of State rose and expressed his regret at the observation of this member, adding that it reflected discredit on the whole Assembly. Perhaps, the present editor of the Madras Mail has got some connection with that member. According to this paper if once the Government officials deem a man to be guilty, it is quite sufficient and he should immediately be subjected to executive action and punished severely. It is because the Government had no one to give it a sound advice like this till now, that it has unfortunately made elaborate arrangements for the efficient administration of justice in the country!

ANDHRAPRAKASIKA, Madras, Nov. 11th, 1916.

Mr. Tilak.

55. Referring to the judgment of the Bombay High Court in the appeal preferred by Mr. Tilak against the order of the District Magistrate of Poona binding him over for good behaviour for one year, the Andhraprakasika, of the 11th November, says that it is not right on the part of the District authorities to create commotion unnecessarily, and prays that they will show some sympathy in their dealings.

LOKOPAKARI, Madras, Nov. 13th, 1916.

German trade after the war.

56. The Lokopakari, of the 13th November, thinks that the prohibition of German trade in India after the war will have an adverse effect on this country, as it is only in Germany that many of the Indian articles find a favourable market.

SWADESAMITRAN, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

The Central Provinces Government and Mrs. Besant.

57. Adverting to the explanation given by the Central Provinces Government for the action taken by it against Mrs. Besant, the Swadesamitran, of the 14th November, says:—Though this explanation will not give satisfaction to any one, we appreciate the spirit in which Sir Benjamin Robertson came forward to give a full reply on this subject. We wish the Governments higher in status than the Central Provinces Government follow in his wake. The provision of the Defence of India Act under which the order of the Central Provinces Government is said to be issued presumes that the individual affected by the order has acted or is likely to act against public peace or the safety of India. But how could the political speeches, which, according to the presumption of the Central Provinces Government, were to have been delivered by Mrs. Besant at Amroati have affected public peace on the safety of India? Even granting that these speeches would have disseminated sedition, there were separate provisions of law under which action could have been taken against her. So the action taken by Central Provinces Government is clearly a misuse of the power entrusted to it. As Mrs. Besant has now denied altogether that she intended to deliver any political speech at Amraoti, the information on which the Central Provinces Government has taken action was evidently incorrect. This makes the position of that Government still more untenable.

Mrs. Besant and Central Provinces Government.

Referring to the order prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Central Provinces and Berar, the Lokaprakasam, of the 6th November, says:—This order prevents her from attending the Theosophical Conference at Amvaoti. We fail to see any connection between this Conference and the Defence of India Act. If each provincial satrap were to prevent her from entering the territories under his jurisdiction without prosecution and trial, without giving reasons for the step taken and without making an attempt to prove the guilt, and if the Madras Government also prohibit her from staying in Madras, it would indeed be an easy and convenient thing. In that case the only course open to her will be to provide herself with an airship.

LOKAPRAKASAM, Trichur, Nov. 6th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 8th November, refers to the great discontent among the people resulting from the application of the Defence of India Act against this loyal English lady, Mrs. Besant, and asks "what may be the next step"?

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Nov. 8th, 1916.

Mrs. Besant.

58. Referring to the order prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering the Central Provinces, the Desamata, of the 8th November, says:—We are at a loss to know what offence under the Defence of India Act, Mrs. Besant has committed to deserve this punishment. The Act is mainly a war measure. Did the authorities fear that as a result of her speeches, the people of the Central Provinces will rise in revolt against the Government? The treatment offered to her by the authorities endears her all the more to the people and does not reduce her in their estimation. May the Government conduct themselves in such a way as to deserve the confidence of the Indians!

DESAMATA, Rajahmundry, Nov. 8th, 1916.

The Maharaja of Bobbili's son.

59. In commenting on the nomination of the Maharaja of Bobbili's son to the Madras Legislative Council, the Andhrapatrika, of the 10th November, says:—Learned men like Sir V Krishnaswami Ayyar and the Hon'ble Sir P. Sivaswami Ayyar, who do not belong to the aristocracy, showed some hesitancy in the Council meetings and thus had their fame tarnished. The Maharaja of Bobbili, on the other hand, showed in the Council admirable independence, attained fame, and brought credit to the Andhra country. He thus set a good example for his son to follow. If the son follows in the footsteps of his father, his presence in the Legislative Council will undoubtedly be useful to the Andhra country and to South India.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov 10th, 1916.

Floods in the Kurnool district.

60. The Andhrapatrika, of the 10th November, says:—The progressing State of Banganapalle has suffered much from the floods in the Kurnool district. There was also heavy loss of life there. The town of Kurnool has also suffered to a large extent. It is a great consolation that the District Collector and other officers, on the one hand, and the Nawab of Banganapalle, on the other, are prepared to render every help to the distressed. The Collector has not only collected subscriptions to the extent of Rs. 2,000 having himself contributed Rs. 250, but also convinced the Government of the gravity of the situation and got Rs. 10,000 sanctioned for the relief of distress in the Kurnool district. The Andhra country feels highly thankful to both the Collector and the Government for this. It is a pity that the Collectors of other districts have not shown even one hundredth of this sympathy.

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 10th, 1916.

Anglo-Indian papers.

61. The Andrapatrika, of the 13th November, says:—Some Anglo-Indian papers have arrogance, rage, self-conceit and harshness of the tongue for their natural characteristics. The conductors of those papers have made it their duty to revile respectable Indian leaders with or without grounds. The Madras Mail says that if Mr. Tilak is a source of danger to the country he must be done away with. To revile Mr. Tilak who is enshrined in the hearts of the Indians is to revile the whole Indian nation. It is difficult to understand why the authorities do not bring the conductors of Anglo-Indian papers writing such mischievous things to book. Do not such writings create race hatred?

ANDHRAPATRIKA, Madras, Nov. 14th, 1916.

The Kistna floods.

62. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th November, says that the Kistna floods are due to the Conservancy Department creating lankas across the river and reducing its breadth from 2 miles to 1, while neglecting to strengthen the banks. He prays that the Hon'ble Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao Pantulu and the rulers will enquire into the causes of the floods and see their way to them.

Inundation of crops in the Kaikalur taluk.

63. A correspondent to the Andhrapatrika, of the 14th November, attributes the inundation of large areas of crops in the Kaikalur taluk to the salt-creek which carries drainage water to the sea, having too many bends which obstruct the free flow of water. He prays that the bends may be removed and the drain straightened.

KERALA SANCHARI, Calicut, Nov. 8th, 1916.

The partition of Malabar.

64. Referring to the announcement made by the Collector, Mr. Evans, at the last meeting of the Malabar District Board regarding the partition of Malabar, the Kerala Sanchari, of the 8th November, points out that Malabar being too big to be administered by one Collector, the proposed measure will be conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all the parties concerned and that the people should be grateful to the Government for it characterises the objections of the people of South Canara as silly and selfish, and hopes that the scheme will soon bear fruit.

YOGAKSHEMAM, Trichur, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Yogakshemam, of the 10th November, also approves of the proposed partition of Malabar.

The Malabar partition.

The Kerala Patrika, of the 11th November, also approves of, and strongly supports, the proposed partition of Malabar.

Referring to the proposed partition of Malabar, the Malayala Manorama, of the 15th November, thinks that it will be beneficial to all the parties concerned.

Slave trade.

65. The Manorama, of the 10th November, draws attention to a case before the Joint Magistrate of Malabar, in which two Moplahs are charged with slave trade, points out that this practice still obtains both in Malabar and in the Cochin State, and hopes that the District Magistrate of Malabar and the Cochin Darbar will take early measures to put a stop to it.

MANORAMA, Calicut, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Vaccination department.

66. In reviewing the report on the working of the Vaccination Department for the year 1915–16, the Manorama, of the 10th November, expresses surprise at the statement in the report that small-pox cases in Calicut were fewer in number than in the previous year, though there was severe outbreak of this epidemic during the year under review, and dwells upon the necessity of paying more attention to vaccination, which, to some extent, checks its growth and extent. It, however, thinks that it should not be made compulsory in the case of the Nambudiris who object to it on religious grounds.

KERALODAYAM, Trichur, Nov. 14th, 1916.

India and the commercial war.

67. The substance of an article under the heading "India and the Commercial war" appearing in the Keralodayam, of the 14th November, is as follows:—

It is not certain that England's present enemies and Allies will for ever continue to be as such. Even granting that it will be so, it is doubtful whether it is possible to stop all dealings with Germany, or whether it is conducive to the welfare of the empire. Economical considerations, and not the enmity engendered by the war, should guide us in the settlement of questions relating to commerce. As England can obtain enough raw materials from India, Egypt, America and other countries, and as she can find a market for the sale of the articles manufactured out of them in the said countries, she may not suffer much. But such will not be the case with India, Egypt, Australia, etc. If, however, as a result of the labours of the Industrial Commission, it be made possible for us to produce the various articles here from our unlimited supply of raw materials, we may not have to depend on other countries for our requirements. But the European merchants contend that no encouragement should be given to Indian industries, which may do harm to those of other countries. Though they mean by "other countries" "other parts" of the British Empire, it is in fact Germany and Japan, which will be benefited by the adoption of their advice. These people, though they cry aloud that we should have no business transactions with enemy countries, do little to make us independent of them. Unless India be made a living member of the empire and be given commercial freedom, instead of being treated as a purveyor of raw materials for British industries, it will not be possible to make her free from dependence on other countries. Happily, Sir George Barnes, the Member of Commerce in the Viceroy's Council, has openly declared that the weapons which we propose to use against the enemies are double-edged. It is to be hoped that the extraordinary loyalty displayed by all classes of His Majesty's subjects at this critical moment will convince the authorities that it is their duty to give equal treatment to all people within the empire, and that otherwise none will be spared from the evil consequences.

Qaumi Report, Madras, Nov. 4th, 1916.

68. The Qaumi Report, of the 4th November, writes:—"Mourning should be observed in these days because it was at this time that the oppressed family of the Prophet was ruined. But we paint ourselves and in the name of mourning roar with laughter. We have bought wantonness by exchanging grief for pleasure. The beginning of Muharram is marked by the martyrdom of Farūk-i-Azam (Hazrat Umar). The first page of our new year is dyed with the blood of the innocent and the just. Again its ten pages are stained with the just blood of some members of the family of the Prophet and innocent Husain. Great God! the eyes which were created for bitter weeping and the heart which was made to pulsate with pity are today callously and cruelly watching the merry-making and delighting therein.

"Wantonness in the Muharrum."

Alas! Alas! how these pure souls which in innocence left this world must deplore our attitude and how all this tomfoolery must pain their hearts! If it were not for God's latest Apostle the torrent of divine punishment would have overwhelmed us. The heavens would have been rent asunder and the world would have been split in two. Can this be a sign of mourning that the beautiful faces made by God should be disfigured? Can the loud laughter at absurdities be regarded as a form of lamenting? Is it a mark of love to revive the memory of the enemies?

Good God! On the one hand the enemies disregarded the claims of humanity and behaved like beasts. On the other we make ourselves up like beasts. Then the tyrants exposed the grand-daughter and the wife of the grand-son of the Prophet and paraded them in the bazaar. Now we expose our ladies to public view and show them the tamasha.

The Purdah is the adornment of women and it is not lawful for strangers to behold their innocent faces. But the Muharrum has made immodesty lawful. Thousands of women are jostling with men in public. Hundreds of ladies are exposed to view on the balconies.

God save us! Can this be the observance of purdah that women go about the streets unveiled and peep through the holes in their purdah? Can this be modesty? Can this be the secret of chastity that our females should join the vulgar throng and cast their pure glances at the impure and bear the brunt of their unmannerly looks?

Qaumi Report, Madras, Nov. 9th, 1916.

Wantonness in Muharram.

The Qaumi Report, of the 9th November, in continuation of its article on the marginally-noted subject in its issue of the 4th November, writes:—The excitement of the first ten days of Muharram came to an end the day before yesterday evening. No one can fail to remember Husain, but the sightseers have forgotten Muharram. Worn out with ten days' excitement the weary ones are probably sleeping oblivious of their temporal or spiritual gain during those sacred days.

It is true the black paint is gone from their faces, but can the stigma of black deeds be so easily washed away? The paint has surely gone, but will not the blots of evil deeds remain?

To mention lightly the name of the beloved ones of the Apostle of God, of those of his daughter and grand-daughters, to clap hands at the mention of their names, to dance and sing and to beg alms in their names are acts not easily forgotten. Islam does not sanction even weeping. The true signs of a Mussalman are patience and gratitude Alas! all this dancing, painting, frivolity and pleasure! even the enemy would not indulge in such things. Do we indulge in or look at such merry-making on the occasion of the anniversary of the death of any of our relations? If there be any sensible man about he will think of the valuable time lost, the amount of money wasted, the extent of the disgrace during these ten days, and then vow to observe mourning until the day of his death.

Sorrow is something which remains fresh as long as life lasts. Is that sorrow which is felt as long as paint and bhang are used and then is lost sight of in ten days?

People who are overcome by ten days' debauchery will see, if they only open their eyes, that in the hearts of the friends of Husain grief is still fresh.

Mussalmans! for God's sake consider that not even a false religion allows music, enjoyment and immodesty on the occasion of the anniversaries of the death of saints and martyrs. If our women become immodest and indifferent, our posterity will have none of the true spirit of Islam. It is martyrs alone who have taught us to spend and be spent for the sake of personal honour.

III.—Legislation.

Manorama, Calicut, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The recent nomination to the Madras Legislative Council.

69. The Manorama, of the 10th November, writes:—The nomination of the Kumara Raja of Bobbili as a member of Madras Legislative Council and the announcement of a donation of fifty thousand rupees by the Maharaja of Bobbili towards the War Fund, coming as they do one after the other, may create various suspicions in the minds of the people. But we do not believe that there is any connection between the two. The propriety of the nomination has, however, yet to be proved.

Keralodayam, Trichur, Nov. 14th, 1916.

The recent nomination to the Madras Legislative Council.

The Keralodayam, of the 14th November, points out that though Lord Pentland's administration has not been a subject for serious criticisms, his recent nominations to the Legislative Council have not given satisfaction to the people, especially that of the Kumara Raja of Bobbili, which appears to have been conferred on him in accordance with the wishes of his father, and not because he has given proof of any special qualification for it. The paper fails to understand what community it is that is intended to be represented by him, thinks that the power of nomination is conferred on the Governor with a view to enable him to select members from amongst communities, which are not represented, and hopes that the authorities will, in future, pay more heed to public opinion in the matter.

IV.—Native States.

Swadeshabhimani, Mangalore, Nov. 10th, 1916.

The Chiefs' Conference at Delhi.

70. The Swadeshabhimani, of the 10th November, in the course of a leading article on this subject, writes:—Looking at the subjects taken up for discussion at this conference, we cannot help agreeing with the Hindu in the view that there was nothing in it which may be deemed to be of extraordinary interest. It had been surmised that the conference was organised in order to ascertain the views of the Chiefs on some of the important political questions which crop up from day to day. But neither His Excellency the Viceroy's inaugural address nor His Highness the Gaekwar's reply thereto gives room for this conjecture. The conference being the first of its kind, it is perhaps not very surprising that it did not lead to any deliberations of far-reaching importance. We may, therefore, look forward to better results in the future, if it should be held every year. This must have been the reason which prompted His Highness the Gaekwar to express the wish that there should be a similar conference next year also. His Excellency the Viceroy has granted the wish. It is our earnest hope and prayer that this annual assemblage may prove to be the means of bringing about greater unity among the Chiefs and lead to the greater glory of these Feudatories and their Suzerain alike.

Writing on the same subject, the Vokkaligara Patrike, of the 15th November, says:—We have no doubt that this conference will be of immense service in helping the progress of the Native States. We, therefore, hope that it will be held every year, and that the administration of these States will be more glorious than ever.

VOKKALIGARA PATRIKE, Bangalore City, Nov. 15th, 1916.

Writing on the same subject, the Vrittanta Patrike, of the 16th November, remarks:—For the first time the Indian Ruling Chiefs were enabled to gather together to deliberate upon high administrative problems. This move is certainly in the right direction, and will not fail to be hailed with pleasure by one and all in this country. It may be that a time will come when the opinions of our Ruling Chiefs will be invited even with regard to the administration of British India.

VRITTANTA PATRIKE, Mysore, Nov. 16th, 1916.

Many of our people look forward with great hopes to the changes that are believed to be impending in the administration of this country and it is the universal prayer that those changes may be such as will really be conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all classes of our people. It is hard, however, to lay down what exactly should be the changes that should be introduced in the Government of this country in the near future, in view of the fact that our intellectual progress is not uniform. While some parts of the country have advanced sufficiently far to be able to exercise popular rights efficiently there are others which are still in a very backward condition and cannot safely be entrusted with any real power. Means should, therefore, be devised to raise all classes of people and all parts of our country to the same intellectual level. In considering these matters we certainly cannot afford to forget the many Native States which also greatly vary in their administrative methods and the measure of liberty enjoyed by their subjects. While some of them are governed on advanced democratic principles which are well worth being copied by our British Rulers there are many others which are still very primitive in their methods as compared with those prevailing in British India. We are of opinion that if a uniform system of administration is introduced in British India, as well as in the Native States simultaneously it will greatly promote the progress of our country. It is for this reason that we welcome this first conference of our Ruling Chiefs at Delhi, and trust that it will not be without its use, in bringing about healthy administrative reforms.

71. Referring to the decision of the Government not to impose a duty on the tea exported from Travancore, which it treated in a former issue as a victory for the Travancore Darbar, the Malayala Manorama, of the 11th November, now points out that it cannot be regarded as such, and that the Travancore Darbar have only had a partial success, for which, however, the people are indebted to the British Government, observes that inasmuch as the Travancore Darbar give all facilities to the planters, and incur more expenditure on their account than in other countries, they are entitled to get at least

MALAYALA MANORAMA, Kottayam, Nov. 11th, 1916.

A victory for Travancore.

as much out of them as the planters in other countries pay to their Governments, and invites the attention of the Darbar to the necessity of publishing the statistics relating to the various expenses and incomes, under this head, of themselves and of countries like British India and Ceylon.

Police transfers in Malabar.

1. The West Coast Spectator, of the 16th November, states:—"A correspondent sends us a long-drawn-out correspondence on police transfers in Malabar. He asks why individual policemen are stationed in particular places for years together in contravention of a provision in the Police rules which limits the duration of a policeman's stay in a locality to seven years. If the Superintendent cares to look into records he will find policemen staying in certain places for over ten years. This practice is certainly wrong as it leads the men into forming likes and dislikes not at all conducive to good work.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 16th, 1916.

"When a policeman under orders of transfer moves heaven and earth to get the transfer cancelled, it must be evident that he has particular reasons to stick to the place—reasons that will not be appreciated by the people of the locality. We are opposed to constant transfers, but must draw the line when policemen become fixtures. It is to be hoped that the Superintendent will disturb such fixtures, and give the move to certain men who have stagnated. It would be interesting to know how many such old stagers flourish in this circle".

The Central Hindu College, Benares.

2. The following appears in New India of the 22nd November:—"I am shocked to hear of the raiding by the Criminal Investigation Department of the Central Hindu College Hostel. Such an indignity has never been put on it since it was founded, and it is now the Hindu University College. Surely, if the Criminal Investigation Department officers were suspicious, and wished to arrest a student, they might have spoken to the Principal and taken the lad away without this public insult. I know that all protests are useless, but as the late President of the Trustees of the College, as a member of the University Court and a Fellow of the University, I do protest against this gratuitous and provocative proceeding.

"Annie Besant."

New India, Madras, Nov. 22nd, 1916.

Police raids in Bengal.

3. New India, of the 23rd November, remarks:—"The news from Bengal now-a-days is uniformly bad: the last is from Mymensingh, where four houses have been raided by the police and six students have been arrested—four collegians and two schoolboys. Do the authorities think that this method of Government can be permanent? Altogether something like one thousand people are said to be interned under the old lettres de cachet Regulations or under the Defence of India Act. The widespread misery thus caused is a sad commentary on the 'benign Government' under which we are supposed to live. And the 'end is not in sight,' for things grow worse not better. We have 'the best Civil Service in the world,' according to the proud boast so often made. But the results of its rule can hardly be deemed satisfactory. If we had Home Rule, the state of Bengal would be pointed to as a proof that Indians were unfit to rule themselves. We do not know what conclusions are drawn by the admirers of the Heaven-born."

New India, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

The Provincial Judicial Service.

4. The Hindu, of the 22nd November, writes:—"Answers given by the Government yesterday to some interpellations on important subjects were very unsatisfactory. They were either incomplete or disclosed a determination to ignore the representations of non-official honourable members. There were three or more questions regarding the reorganisation of the Provincial Judicial Service, and we also notice a resolution in the agenda paper on the subject. Our readers may recollect that Sir Harold Stuart stated in Council in March last that the local Government had then ready a draft of a letter to the Government of India recommending the reorganisation of the service. To a question put as to what further action has been taken on the matter, the surprising answer has been vouchsafed yesterday that the Government of India have not been addressed hitherto in view of the financial situation created by the war, and that the Government now proposed to await the Public Services Commission's report before making any recommendations in the matter. We cannot but characterise the attitude revealed by this answer as one of disrespect to the Council to which a solemn pledge was made by a Member of Government. . . . . The spectacle of the Government going back on their own word is one which is not likely to enhance their prestige or inspire public confidence. . . . . Have not Members of the Civil, the Indian Educational and the Police Services been singled out for the benefit of enhanced allowances, though the financial condition of the Government was unsatisfactory and their emoluments were being considered by the Public Services Commission? We regret that the Government of Madras should have assumed an attitude, which is inconsistent with their public declarations and is also indefensible."

Teaching and foreigners.

5. In a leader on this subject, New India, of the 21st November, says:—"In a recent issue of the Times Educational Supplement, there is an interesting letter under the heading 'Modern Language Teaching in the Universities,' from the pen of Major de SansGene, which Educational authorities in India might do well to study. . . . . 'No University,' he says, 'that employs foreign teachers exclusively in any department can be said to give adequate training in any subject. The corollary to this should be self-evident. The head of any department of English education should be an Englishman.' As we have already had occasion to point out, what is sauce for the goose is by no means always sauce for the gander, and, while agreeing with Major de Sans Gene in the statement of his axiom, we extend its applicability to India as well. This means that the head of any department of Indian education should be an Indian. We shall be told that circumstances are different in India. It is true that Indian education is in the hands of foreigners, but the result has been to deprive the Indian youth of many valuable elements in education which would have been secured to him had education in India been under Indian control. To mention only three of these: his welfare has been almost entirely neglected as to his physical, medical and religious condition. . . . . Until Indian education is controlled by Indians, young India cannot hope to be Indian in thought, feeling and character, and it is to give Indian education the blessing of Indian control that all true lovers of the country must work."

New India, Madras, Nov. 22nd, 1916.

Boy Scouts.

6. In an article on this subject in New India of the 22nd November, Mr. G. S. Arundale writes:—"I must confess I was sorry to see the announcement in a local paper to the effect that the Boy Scout movement is to be officially established in Madras. If I thought the movement would be made thoroughly Indian in tone and Indian in aspiration, full of passionate patriotism as in other countries, I should welcome it most heartily, but we have yet to find a Director of Public Instruction and a number of English headmasters and officials filled with passionate patriotism for India. Yet without this there will be no life in it. There will be thrown in, for appearance sake, a number of Indian gentlemen whose names will look well on paper, but whose influence over the boys will, in fact, be nil. For the brand of patriotism we may expect will be of the usual kind supplied to the official world by those who wish for places and titles. . . . . I very much doubt whether anything would have been done had they not been afraid that the youth of Madras might fall into the clutches of Mrs. Besant and Mr. Arundale. On October 9th a leading article was written in New India advocating the Boy Scout idea. On November 14th a meeting is held at Government House; and no protestations will convince me that this new departure is not taken by the Educational authorities because they cordially dislike and distrust any influence that Mrs. Besant or even I may have over the student population of this city. Now I think I may say that neither Mrs. Besant nor myself have the slightest desire to interfere between the teacher and his pupil; but we cannot be silent or inactive when we know that the most admirable material is being wasted or distorted under the present system of education. We know perfectly well, for we know the Indian students far more intimately than the majority of those teaching them today, that the modern Indian method produces two kinds of citizen—the citizen with no will of his own, the sycophant the trained flatterer of all that is western and of everyone with a colourless skin; and secondly, the citizen who rebels at every turn against the constant repression of speech and action. Educational authorities are turning out these two classes, and these two classes alone; and their Boy Scout movement, if it is saturated with the official element, will be, I fear, confined to lads who join, because they are told to do so. . . . . Our friends in high quarters always forget that condescension is of no value whatever to the Indian youth, or to the youth of any country for the matter of that. He will do anything for those who love him and who devote themselves to his welfare, but he has yet to learn that those responsible for his training love India first, and all other countries, including the Empire, afterwards. If His Excellency the Governor, the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction, the Principals of the Madras Colleges, and the various professors and teachers, will convince him that they love India first and foremost, then he will follow them to the uttermost. They cannot so convince him, it is not to be expected that they should; but they must not then be surprised if he wonders what they are driving at when they establish these movements, or if he turns from them to those whose lives have shown that they are consecrated to the service of India, his beloved land, whom he worships with all the greater fervour and enthusiasm because she is in foreign hands, and because she is yet an outcaste in the eyes of those who are the products of a western civilisation."

Referring to the comments of the Times of India approving of the action of His Excellency the Governor regarding the formation of an Indian Boy Scout organisation, New India, of the 24th November, says:—"Does the Times of India think, like the Madras Mail, that India remains loyal to the Crown only because her sons are unarmed? Have not Indian soldiers, though armed, defended the Empire in many a field? Is it not the case that arms are easily obtained by dacoits, political and other, and are only unattainable by the orderly and law-abiding citizens? This oft-repeated detestable suspicion of Indians, lurking in the hearts of their fellow-subjects, is a constant cause of anger, and deepens the gulf between the coloured and colourless inhabitants of India. Even if the Anglo-Indians feel it, it would be wiser to refrain from expressing it, and to let it die out by suppression. There is no question of arms or no arms; 300,000,000 of unarmed people are not kept in submission by 100,000 armed or half-armed. As Lord Minto said: 'When India does not want us, we shall have to go.' India, by a vast majority, desires to preserve the British connection, wishes to win Home Rule in co-operation with the British and not by force. When will the British learn to trust the Indians, so that they may live here fearlessly, needing no artificial safeguards? Well will it be for both countries when that trust dawns in British hearts."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 24th, 1916.

7. The Hindu, of the 23rd November, states:—"An important debate was raised at the meeting of the local Legislative Council yesterday on the question of the extension and consolidation of secondary education in the presidency.

Secondary education.

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

. . . . . We think that the Madras Government could have shown practical sympathy with the objects which the advocates of the resolution had in mind more by agreeing to commit the questions to a committee than by the resolute refusal which was extended to the proposal. The intervention of His Excellency the President in the debate gave, we rather fear, a distinctly undesirable turn to the debate on a subject on which, as Honourable Non-official Members have been lectured oftentimes in the Council there should be no differences of opinion. His Excellency would appear to have spoken with some warmth, but we doubt very much whether, on the very definite points raised during the discussion, he had anything informing to say. Lord Pentland made a number of very general observations regarding the spirit in which discussions proceeded in the Council and the way in which statistics were quoted and the example of other countries and provinces were cited, which deserve examination at some length. . . . . His Excellency is further reported to have said: 'They (statistics and analogies) would be misleading to people in this Presidency because nothing but shadows, nothing but darkness, nothing but imperfections were to be seen. Nothing was even said of the progress that was going on and the work that was being done for the improvement of education.' The subject of the resolution was secondary education and the provision of facilities therefor, and we beg to leave to doubt whether the opportunity was one for singing hallelujas. His Excellency has been apparently upset by the absence of any mention of what he calls the improvement of secondary education, but it is notorious that the Local Government have been quite unsympathetic in regard to it. . . . . His Excellency cannot surely be ignorant of the fact that Honourable Members do not hesitate to give praise where it is due. In the debate on the resolution next to that on secondary education, the Hon'ble Colonel Ellis greatly appreciated the acknowledgment, by the mover, of the efforts of the Public Works Department. His Excellency's speech was, we have to say, not one of reconciliation, and we do not in the least regret that the Honourable Mover of the resolution declined to accept the invitation of the President to withdraw it."

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

The Allahabad University.

8. The Hindu, of the 23rd November, remarks:—"At the recent Senate Meeting of the Allahabad University a proposition was moved to enable candidates who failed in the B.A. or B. Sc. examinations to appear at subsequent examinations without attending a further course of study in an affiliated college. . . . . We are greatly surprised to find that this very necessary and perfectly sound proposal should have appeared to some European members as 'extremely dangerous.' . . . . . The ignorance of the conditions of the life of the students and the amount of prejudice displayed in these utterances are really astounding and one would expect more calm and sober statements and not such wild talk, from responsible educationists to whom is assigned the sacred task of educating the youths of the country."

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

The Convocation address.

9. The Hindu, of the 23rd November, writes:—"We publish elsewhere the text of the Convocation address delivered this evening to the graduates of the Madras University by Nawab Saiyid Hussain Bilgrami, C.S.I. Mr. Bilgrami is a Muhammadan gentleman of considerable attainments, who was holding high official position in the Native State of Hyderabad, and was also a Member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India. His Convocation address has been looked forward to with much interest, but we doubt whether it can be said to come up to public expectation. . . . . It does not seem to us quite in the fitness of things that the Convocation address should be used to advocate the formation of a war loan in Madras, on the ground that though she has contributed liberally towards the upkeep of the Hospital ship and other expenses it is not enough. Equally out of place it seems to us are his observations on the political aspirations which are cherished by a large section of educated India at the present time."

Writing on this subject, New India, of the 23rd November, says:—We publish elsewhere extracts from the Convocation address by Nawab Saiyid Hussain Belgrami, C.S.I., and we must confess to a sense of disappointment that better use has not been made of the opportunity offered. In the earlier portions of the address we are treated to the usual panegyric on the results of the educational system, accompanied by a rather foolish sneer at Germany, who, whatever her faults may be, is far ahead of England and India in matters educational. . . . . We doubt if the givers of Convocation addresses are wise in indulging in flights of political oratory. Sir Harold Stuart denounced the 'impatient idealist' only to see the idealist's hope transmuted into practical politics. Nawab Saiyid Hussain Belgrami denounces the agitation for Home Rule as a 'hopeless pursuit,' in the presence of the young graduates who are entering on their life's career, and who will win Home Rule. He is evidently out of sympathy with the Muslim League."

New India, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

A Special Magistrate deprived of his powers.

10. The Hindu, of the 18th November, remarks:—"We have been placed in possession of the facts of a rather hard case of a Special Magistrate in the district of Ganjām who has been deprived of his powers by the Local Government, on the recommendation of the District Magistrate. . . . . Mr. Panigrahi is a respectable landholder of the Uriya community paying annually Rs. 180 as income-tax and Rs. 500 as land revenue. He is an elected member of the Berhampur Taluk Board, in which capacity he has been doing very useful work, and Mr. R. W. Davis, I.C.S., the President of the Board, has testified to the good work of Mr. Panigrahi. It is strange that, in the circumstances, the District Magistrate should have come to the conclusion that Mr. Panigrahi was unfit to be a Special Magistrate, basing his opinion on some inconclusive remarks of the District and Sessions Judge. . . . . It is a case of credulity, and Mr. Macmichael's inference as to the character of Mr. Panigrahi appears to be absolutely unwarranted. The Government, however, on the strength of the District Magistrate's recommendation, have withdrawn the powers of a Special Magistrate from Mr. Panigrahi under section 41 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which empowers them to withdraw all or any of the powers conferred on any person by them or by their subordinates. In fairness to Mr. Panigrahi, the Government should, we think, have asked for an explanation before taking this extreme step, especially as he refused to accede to the Collector's suggestion to resign the office. This process of resignation involves no publicity and is quietly done; but the fact that Mr. Panigrahi did not have recourse to it, but resisted the proposal, shows him to be a man of mettle. On the whole facts of the case, we cannot but come to the conclusion that Mr. Panigrahi has been unjustly dealt with, and we think it is a fit case for careful scrutiny and review by Government".

Pump politics.

11. The following appears in the West Coast Spectator of the 21st November:—"'Civis Romanus' writes: If the local branch of the Home Rule League is not to be regarded as a comic opera organisation it will really have to choose the subjects of its debates a little more carefully than it did on Saturday. A body charged with the revolution of an empire can surely produce more serious grievances than the fact that local self-government in Calicut has decided to place the Parish Pump at one end of the street instead of at the other, for that is what the distance amounts to in a town measuring 5 miles across. If it cannot, Calicut must possess an exceptionally competent Municipal Council in spite of the undesirable European element it contains, which naturally brings one to the speech of that licensed humourist Mr. Manjeri Rama Ayyar, who, I fancy, expressed the sense of the meeting when he pronounced the theory that the Europeen vote on any body ought to be disregarded: though he rather blew upon the theory himself when he sought to become Municipal Chairman and kotowed pretty vigorously for the so-called European vote: but the memory of politicians is proverbially short."

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

The Acting Health Officer, Madras.

12. New India, of the 23rd November, observes:—"Two incidents connected with the proceedings of the local Legislative Council require to be particularly noted by the public. The Hon'ble Mr. Sivaswami Ayyar could not give a satisfactory reply on the question of making the present Health Officer of Madras permanent in the place which he has filled with so remarkable ability, and the other is the attitude of the Government towards the demand for the appointment of an Indian to the Board of Revenue. Both of these instances show, in their own way, how badly India needs Home Rule if any progress is to be possible; and what is equally manifest, how the change in the angle of vision has yet to come so far as the Madras Government is concerned. . . . . It is notorious how, during the past decade, the Health Department of Madras did not discharge its duties efficiently, how the death-rate was rising and how the people were perpetually annoyed for no purpose. At last, the present President of the Corporation came across a person who, in his opinion, could cleanse the Augean stable; and his expectations have been more than justified. The President—it is now an open secret—has strongly recommended to Government that the officer, who has been thus found capable after a very severe trial, should be appointed permanently and the whole Corporation demands it. Dr. Denovan, an I.M.S. officer and naturally an expert, has spoken highly of the Health Officer's achievements; and yet what do we find? The Government—with an Indian member in charge of the portfolio concerned—is still delaying the matter; and are probably in search of an 'expert'—who may make a muddle of the administration again."

WEST COAST REFORMER, Calicut, Nov. 18th, 1916.

Indians and the Board of Revenue.

13. The West Coast Spectator, of the 18th November, writes:—Lord Pentland has vetoed a resolution a non-official member had given notice of 'recommending' to Government to appoint an Indian to the Revenue Board. 'Public interests', like charity, cover a multitude of sins. It will be remembered that some time ago, a resolution on the same subject was actually moved in the Council, and Sir Murray Hammick gave an assurance that Indians would be admitted to that charmed circle of bureaucrats when an opportunity occurred, and provided there were Indians of sufficient seniority and merit.

"Perhaps, the resolution was then considered harmless and not going against 'public interest.' The ways of the powers-that-be are certainly inscrutable; but the 'public,' we are afraid, will not endorse the view Lord Pentland has taken. It is rather unfortunate that towards the end of his career in this presidency, the ex-Liberal politician Lord Pentland, who gave Scotland a Radical reform, the Small Holders' Act, should do things that would have come with better grace from a Tory or pure-blooded Anglo-Indian."

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 21st, 1916.

Writing further on this subject, the West Coast Spectator, of the 21st November, says:—"We congratulate Lord Pentland on his having on reconsideration allowed Mr. Narasimha Ayyar to move his resolution on the Board of Revenue and Indians, doubtless on account of the strong condemnation excited in the press and elsewhere by His Excellency's refusal to allow it. We can more or less prophesy the fate of the resolution, but it is good that such resolutions should be publicly discussed and rejected or accepted. To nip them in the bud is bad policy, as it creates bad blood."

HINDU, Madras, Nov. 22nd, 1916.

The Hindu, of the 22nd November, observes:—"At yesterday's meeting of the Madras Legislative Council the question of the claims of Indians for one of the superior appointments, a membership of the Board of Revenue, was once more raised and laid to rest according to the time-honoured traditions of the policy which has guided this matter for now over three-quarters of a century. . . . . We are told that when 'a suitable opportunity' offered the Government would appoint an Indian who is fit. It is contended that the opportunity which arose last month was not a suitable opportunity? If so Sir Alexander Cardew was bound in justice to the services and the public to explain how the vacancy that arose owing to Mr. Gillman's preferment was not a suitable opportunity for the Provincial Service, but was an excellent opportunity for the Civil Service. After all, is a Membership of the Board of Revenue a place requiring such exceptional qualifications and merit that Indian officials have to wait upon Providence indefinitely, so that it may please Government to find them suitable? If it requires such transcendental abilities, it is remarkable that so many Members of the Board of Revenue have been passed over as not sufficiently fit for preferment to the Executive Council. . . . . It is the peculiar fate of this large question in Indian administration, that in respect of the employment in and the aspirations of educated India for higher appointments in the public services, promises previously made or pledges previously given, have counted for so little where vested interests of bureaucratic services are involved. Long ago, Lord Lytton wrote with reference to one of such pledges 'we have kept the promise to the ear, but have broken it to the heart.' The promise made by Sir Murray Hammick in 1910 has now been made to evaporate. It was tangible in form and is now ripe for fulfilment if the Government is minded to respect its own pledges and to deal equitably with the claims of officers of the Provincial Civil Service. The amended resolution which was proposed by the Government and was passed by a majority is a farcical conclusion. It leaves the matter in a worse condition than it was before, as regards the persons whom the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar's resolution was intended to benefit."

The Government and the ryots.

14. The Hindu, of the 24th November, remarks:—"It appears to be almost impossible to get the Government to look at land revenue problems in the country from a point of view different to that from which they are accustomed to consider them. The proceedings of the local Legislative Council during the last two days have afforded additional proof of their absolute unwillingness even to cause inquiries to be made into specific questions relating to the agricultural classes, and of their strenuous opposition to even small measures of relief. During the debate on a similar subject two years ago, Sir Alexander Cardew (then Mr. Cardew) expressed his horror at the character of such proposals because they affected the most fruitful of the Government's sources of revenue. As this idea is strongly imbedded in the minds of officials and as it is really responsible for the adamantine opposition set up by Government to a reform of the administration of land revenue, it is worth while to quote those remarks. . . . The Government become unusually sensitive and nervous when assessment questions are raised, and they fear that committees, inquiries and investigations may land them in trouble. An overweighted administration, which is not responsible to the people, cannot be expected to deal with such questions in a sympathetic way, and unless the representatives of the people are clothed with power, any proposals for the remedy of the serious grievances of the ryots will not command due attention."

The Administration of Salt Revenue.

15. In a leader on this subject, the Hindu, of the 20th November, says:—"The Board's remarks in the chapter on the quality of salt confirm in a most telling manner what has been so often said after the outbreak of the European war which is staggering humanity, viz., that the members of the Imperial Civil Services have little or no knowledge of physical science and chemistry. The department and, for that matter, the Local Government have gone to work the wrong way in trying to improve the quality of salt generally and to repel the invasion of Bombay salt in particular. During the past thirty-five years, after the department was organised on its present basis, spasmodic and intermittent efforts were made to produce pure and light salt. First, there was a committee presided over by a Civilian unconnected with the department to devise measures for improving the methods of salt manufacture. Then a departmental officer who had no pretensions to technical knowledge of manufacturing salt was deputed to study Bombay methods. . . . The present head of the department interested himself so much in the matter as to proceed to Bombay and study the question on the spot in 1914. We understand that he found that the inferences drawn from the Bombay methods by the departmental officer who went before him were not accurate in several respects, and that his recommendations could not be adopted in their entirety. After his return from Bombay, the Commissioner issued certain instructions some of which were quite at variance with those which had been previously received as Biblical injunctions. . . . . It is a matter for surprise that it did not occur to Government long ago to secure for a limited period, the services of a scientific salt expert to examine the manufacturing operations of the department, study the systems in force and report whether it is possible to manufacture pure and light salt in this Presidency, having regard to the climatic conditions and physical features of the two Presidencies. Should the answer be in the negative, it would be best to abandon the expensive experiments in salt making which have been carried on for so many years by officers with little or no knowledge of practical chemistry."

Hindu, Madras, Nov. 20th, 1916.

West Coast Spectator, Calicut, Nov. 16th, 1916.

16. The West Coast Spectator, of the 16th November, writes:—"Better late than never. Though at the fag end of his term of office, Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar has been appointed Vice-President of Council. Lord Pentland deserves the thanks of the Indian people for this, though belated, recognition of an Indian's right to act as Vice-President".

United India and Native States, Madras, Nov. 16th, 1916.

17. United India and Native States, for the week ending 16th November, observes:—"Mr. Herbert Barrows recently made some interesting references to the relations which should exist between England and India He remarked truly enough that England should make a public declaration that she was in India not for her own advantage, but for the good of India herself. No one, we fancy, will be disposed to quarrel with the socialist leader for demanding such a declaration. When, however, he proposed that England should withdraw from the administration of India while helping her in the interval in the art of self-government 'in friendly and peaceful consultations with the best representatives of Indian thought' we are afraid that the suggestion to some extent appears fanciful and chimerical . . . . Though we are convinced that good Government cannot be a substitute for self-government we are equally certain that Indians must still undergo a period of probation before they can be said to be qualified for Home Rule. This is an attitude we assume purely for the good of India herself and not merely for the advantage of England. We are, however, quite sure that the best representatives of Indian thought will be in hearty agreement with Mr. Barrows when he calls on his countrymen to adopt a policy of sympathy and moral persuasion in their dealings with India instead of one of forceful domination which occasionally finds favour with bureaucrats."

West Coast Reformer, Calicut, Nov. 17th, 1916.

18. In a leader on this subject, the West Coast Reformer, of the 17th November, says:—"It has become a fashion among a certain class of educated Indians to cry down politicians or public men with a superior air. One such person, a B.A. B.L., enjoying a comfortable position in the Board of Revenue office, chose to lecture the young men of Madras on the ethics of public service. The wiseacre condemned the whole of Indian public life, with a few individuals like Gokhale and Mehta excepted, and said public men here were not actuated by other than personal motives. . . . . Mr. K. B. Ramanatha Ayyar who presided expressed his surprise, discomfort and disapproval of the pessimistic and cynical tone of the lecture and emphasised the necessity of a robust optimism being imparted to young men. . . . . For a long time the main object of our public workers has been the employment of their countrymen in the higher offices of Government, and they have succeeded in a large measure in these efforts. If there is any class of people who have hitherto benefited more than any other by the exertions of the publicists, it is the class of Indians who occupy high positions in Government service or who hope to do so. . . . . It is blackest ingratitude on the part of such Indians to misrepresent and denounce the publicists who have in most cases undertaken thankless and often perilous task."

Public life.

19. The West Coast Bulletin, for the week ending 17th November, has the following:—"A Simla correspondent to an Upper Indian paper gives a pen-picture of the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nayar's one year's term of office. Malayalam is not known in Delhi and Simla, and the Honourable Member is ignorant of both Hindi and Hindustani. But for the help of a 'Punjabi interpreter' sanctioned by the Government, Sir Sankaran Nayar would be hard put to it either to post a letter, or get a cup of water. Both Simla and Delhi are cold and Sir Sankaran is credited with a longing for the sunshine and palms of the sunny south. To be a Judge, to have the privilege of disagreeing even with superiors and of recording it in dissentient judgments is far better than to be a mere fly on the Council wheel. The only way suggested for the improvement of the Indian member's position in the Council is to throw open half the seats to Indians like Sir Ali Imam and Sir Sankaran Nayar. Unless and until we cannot expect any good to come out of the solitary Indian seat in the Imperial Council. We do not know if the Hon'ble Sir Sankaran Nayar really pines for the sunshine of the south."

West Coast Bulletin, Mattancherry, Cochin State, Nov. 17th, 1916

20. The Western Star, of the 18th November, observes:—"The report on the working of the Madras Department of Agriculture in 1915-16 has been published, with the observations and criticisms of the Board of Revenue and the Madras Government. It was Mr. D. T. Chadwick, the Director, who was responsible for directing and controlling the work of the year, and when this is said, it stands by way of a token that there was continued improvement and the accomplishment of a great deal of useful work, although very much of it must necessarily have been done outside the public eye. Mr. Chadwick not only has great experience of agricultural, economic and revenue conditions in very many portions of the Presidency, but is known to have prodigious capacity for hard, sustained and practical work. . . . . The department did much useful work last year on the chief crops of the Presidency, but having arrived at the end of our space, we must defer notice of these and other portions of the interesting report of Mr. Chadwick."

21. The Malabar Herald, for the week ending 18th November, remarks:—"Responsible people sometimes go astray and make a mess of what they attempt to do. An instance in point is furnished by the recent appointment of the Maharaja of Bobbili's son to the Madras Executive (Legislative?) Council. This was immediately followed by the announcement of a donation of Rs. 50,000 from the father towards the War Fund. Though there may not be any connection between the two, the restless character of public opinion would create a connection. Let us, however, hope that the candidate will justify his appointment."

22. The West Coast Spectator, of the 18th November, has the following:—"We need hardly say that the Indian taxpayer will agree with the writer. As the Amrita Bazaar Patrika humorously puts it, not only should they stop this costly migration to the hills but content themselves with half pay so long as the war continues. The English Cabinet have 'pooled' their salaries and some of the officials have passed a self-denying ordinance declining to receive any salary. The India public servant is overpaid when compared with his compeer in England, and we think he can very well afford to receive half-pay so long as the war lasts.

NON-BRAHMIN, Madras, Nov. 19th, 1916.

Indian Christians and the Legislative Council.

23. The Non-Brahmin, for the week ending 19th November, writes:—"We are sorry that the Government of His Excellency Lord Pentland has most unnecessarily thrown a heavy weight on an advanced and absolutely law-abiding community as the Indian Christians. They are unrepresented in the Council. In Diwan Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai they had a representative last year; and though they have not much of politics, yet they wanted a non-official member. Instead, even the little they have has been taken away from them. They have no representation. This feeling that they have been ignored might have been spared to the community. Indian Christian leaders like Rao Bahadur Arogyaswami Pillai or Mr. Cotelingam or Mr. Devadoss would never be rabid Home Rulers stamping their feet for self-government to-day. Every one of them is a staid thinker who would not rush blindly. It is not yet late. There is an expert's place vacant. Mr. Gnanaprakasam Pillai is an able Engineer, whose work for sanitary progress has been well appreciated. Could he not be nominated?"

NON-BRAHMIN, Madras, Nov. 19th, 1916.

The All-India Congress Committee.

24. The Non-Brahmin, for the week ending 19th November, remarks:—"The names of those elected for the All-India Congress Committee must make non-Brahmins, as a class, think twice before they should in any way countenance the political theatricalities of a designing few. Some fifteen people meet to elect fifteen! And with the solitary exception of Mr. A. P. Patro, there is not a single non-Brahmin. Diwan Bahadur Karunakara Menon, the pillar of the moderate party, who has not hesitated to stand by the Congress flag at great self-sacrifice, is not in it! And we all know why. This is the first sign that Mrs. Besant has captured the Congress. Let it be. We do not care, for, as Dr. Nayar—alas, that he should not be in the Council now where his rather brutal earnestness made him sometimes unpopular—once said, the Home Rule movement will bring to prominence the non-Brahmin community under his brilliant leadership against it. And with the Indian Patriot as its organ, we can protect ourselves from being sold to some fussy busy bodies. But it is a pity that the future Indian rulers of India do not care to at least pretend that they care for others. Why should not, for the sake of policy, be a man like Rao Bahadur Kesava Pillai, have been elected? Hon'ble Mr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, perhaps, the future Governor of Andhra under the suzerainty of Mrs. Besant over India, has a better claim for the Congress Committee than Mr. P. Kesava Pillai, whom he had the impertinence to lecture sime time ago on Congress rules. And why this combination of Home Rule Brahmins against a revered leader like Diwan Bahadur C. Karunakara Menon, respected alike by the people and the Government? How long are we to be made a cheap instrument by others?"

WEST COAST SPECTATOR, Calicut, Nov. 21st, 1916.

The West Coast Spectator, of the 21st November, writes:—"There is not a single non-Brahman, with the exception of Mrs. Besant, among the gentlemen elected by the Madras Provincial Congress Committee to serve on the All-India Committee. We see also the names of certain people who are 'common factors.' Are we to suppose that there is not a single non-Brahman who is competent to sit on the committee? This Brahman caucus has been carrying on its game for some time past, and it is time the non-Brahmans revolted against this constant snub inflicted on them by the Brahman majority in the committee. With such instances of Brahman aggression going on, it is no wonder people confuse Home Rule with Brahmin rule. Even New India is silent on this matter."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 20th, 1916.

The Government of India on indentured emigration.

25. The Indian Patriot, of the 20th November, states:—"The concluding portion of the despatch of the Government of India on indentured emigration, will be read throughout the country with intense satisfaction. If the 'angle of vision' has changed anywhere, it is, indeed, here. The Government is in full sympathy with public opinion, and expresses itself with the spirit of an Indian patriot. . . . . The entire public opinion in this country is behind the Government in its forcible condemnation of the system; and we should be very surprised, indeed, if the Secretary of State would not fully agree with the Government of India."

The Cuddapah District Conference.

26. The Indian Patriot, of the 20th November, writes:—"The address which the Hon'ble Mir Asad Ali Khan delivered as the President of the Cuddapah District Conference last Saturday easily ranks among the most notable utterances of the conference season of this year, not only in this Presidency, but throughout India. The Khan Bahadur has rapidly taken a survey of the situation in all its bearings, and while there is no question of importance on which he has not spoken out, he has throughout maintained a dignified moderation that at once arrests respectful attention even from those who differ from him. He is not prepared to come to rapid conclusion: he is not content to quote figures from Belgium or Canada and bewail over the backwardness of the country and the utter absence of any resolution anywhere to raise it. . . . . To stumping patriots who want self-government to-day, his address must have been rather disappointing. The Honourable Member has been guilty of the crime of omitting all references, in his address, to Home Rule. This would, we very much fear, be inexcusable in the eyes of certain people, but, none the less, the address has not been unwelcome even to them. They cannot find fault with it, because it advocates every improvement advocated by Indian politicians, but without violence of language and denunciation. . . . . We commend this spirit that runs throughout the address of the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur to the attention of every one taking an interest in public affairs."

INDIAN PATRIOT, Madras, Nov. 20th, 1916.

The Englishman's loyalty.

27. New India, of the 20th November, has the following:—"The Indian public is fully aware that certain Anglo-Indian papers make it their business to run down high officials of State because they have rendered some service to India and her children in a spirit of bare justice, which course did not help that class which wants to see the motherland always in bondage. . . . . Of late our Finance Member, Sir William Meyer, has come in for a share of abuse from these papers, for the interests they represent have somewhat suffered, not at all unjustly, because of the policy of Sir William Meyer. These critics, steeped in their selfishness, do not care to ask what the millions of Indians think about Sir William's policy or even what is best in the interests of the administration of the country from the official view point, but see the vast and intricate problems only in the light of how their pockets are affected by Sir William's policy. Profits from tea and jute matter; what if millions suffer and starve? . . . . There is one thing which Indian papers may profitably learn from this vile campaign: the persistence, vigour and cleverness with which the Anglo-Indian papers carry on their agitation. When Indian papers learn to do that, our work will be greatly simplified. Only remember the Press Act: Government is not bold nor just enough to apply the Press Act to Anglo-Indian journals; that Act is reserved for newspapers other than Anglo-Indian!"

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 20th, 1916.

The Congress-Moslem League Scheme for Home Rule for India.

28. In a leader on this subject in New India of the 20th November, Mrs. Annie Besant writes:—"The meeting of the All-India Congress Committee and of the Council of the All-India Muslim League, the only two bodies that are freely elected by and therefore representative of the people of India, and the agreement of these on the reforms necessary to bring self-government to India, are decisive of the attitude to be taken henceforth by India to Great Britain. . . . . It will, of course, be said that the two committees do not represent India but only the educated classes. But that is a sophism, not an argument. Were

NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 20th, 1916.

the Barons more than an infinitesimal fraction of the English nation when they wrested the Magna Charta from King John on Runnymede? Yet that Charter is held to contain the unwritten law of England. Did the Commons represent more than an infinitesimal minority of the British people when they presented the Petition of Rights to James II, and passed the Bill of Rights under William and Mary? Did Parliament represent more than a fraction of the people of Great Britain and Ireland when it passed the Reform Act of 1832? Were the manual labour classes represented before the Reform Act of 1867, which enfranchised them, and made 'Bob Lowe' exclaim: 'Let us educate our masters'? The freedom of a nation has always been won by an educated minority, for they alone can formulate a definite thought-out scheme; the uneducated mass can only riot or revolt; they can destroy, they cannot build; they suffer dumbly until the suffering of revolt seems to be less than the suffering of endurance, and then they flame out and destroy. Chaos ensues, to be ended by a dictatorship. . . . . I add one personal word. It is true that I have had much to do with the agitation which has produced the present results. But now that the demands are clearly formulated, it matters little what happens to me. If the wishes of the Madras Mail are carried out by the Government, and a swift and final breaking of me is wrought, 'the standard floats aloft though the standard-bearer has fallen.' In 1915 if the Government had imprisoned me, the definite movement was young and the journals and the workers might have been cowed. It is now too late, and obedience to the behests of the Mail would only remove the strongest influence which holds back the younger politicians from violence. The Government, by high-handed Executive action, can no longer prevent, they can only precipitate. But they can still, by reversing their present policy, by accepting the determination of India to secure Home Rule after the war, by co-operating with the great Indian representative bodies, win the steadfast allegiance of India to the British connection, and earn the praise of posterity. The Governments of India stand at the parting of the ways."

New India, Madras, Nov. 21st, 1916.

The Government of the Central Provinces and Mrs. Besant.

29. New India, of the 21st November, states:—"The hollowness of the so-called explanation offered by the Central Provinces Government of their order prohibiting Mrs. Besant from entering these Provinces naturally comes in for a strong condemnatory criticism by the Indian press. The statement made is so contradictory and so defeats its own purpose that even the Anglo-Indian organs, who, as a rule, advocate the policy of repression, have thought it wise, quite naturally, too, to let it go unsupported. The order of the Central Provinces Government was foolish, their explanation makes it ridiculous—save that it serves as a useful eye-opener for our people, and shows them how a war measure is unjustly used to shut down not only constitutional political agitation, but religious lecturing. Not that it is going to produce the effect desired by the Government—for repression never quiets but always irritates the public mind. The Central Provinces order has done its useful work, for the entire Indian press have condemned it, and no one denies the weakness of the 'explanation'. The 'reasons' which the Central Provinces Government were challenged to produce will not see the light of day, for the simple reason that they do not exist. Meanwhile, a loyal and law-abiding citizen is harassed not only in her political work, but even in the performance of her religious duties. As we go to press a telegram comes from the Secretaries of the Reception Committee repudiating the statement put into their mouths by the Central Provinces Government. Who speaks next?"

New India, Madras, Nov. 22nd, 1916.

The following appears in New India of the 22nd November:—

"Yesterday's public meeting.

"We do not know whether the Criminal Investigation Department reporters are in the habit of telling the Government the hugeness of the meetings, the proceedings of which they are to convey; and also whether even if that were being done, the Government of Madras would communicate the same to the administrations concerned. For the value of the work done at yesterday's meeting will be greatly lost unless the number of the audience and their attitude towards the subjects discussed were fully noted."

New India, of the 23rd November, has the following:— NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 23rd, 1916.

"The C.P. order in extremis.

"The answer of the Hon'ble Mr. Slocock on behalf of the Government of the Central Provinces and Berar is still being riddled with denials. Nobody can be found who said that the success of the Conference would be prejudiced by Mrs. Besant's presence in Amraoti. Will not Sir Benjamin Robertson lift the veil from these modest protectors of the Conference, who blush unseen, like mute inglorious Miltons?. . . . . When I found that I could not go to Amraoti viâ the Bombay route because of the Bombay order, I cancelled the engagement, as it involved too many days of absence. My correspondent's answer was delayed by illness, but when it came it urged me to reconsider my cancellation, as large numbers of persons were coming to my Theosophical lectures, and great disappointment would be caused. On this ground I renewed the engagement. I have not received any communication of any kind from the Conference, nor from anyone connected with it, and was never asked to go to it nor to stay away. . . . . No official asked me if I should give a political lecture on my visit. Had he done so, I should probably have asked what right he had to enquire. A political lecture is not a crime, and among the thousands I have given none has ever proved to be prejudicial to public safety. The truth is, though no official will say so, that it is not what I say nor what I write which troubles the Government. It is my great personal influence and the love the people bear me. It is not my actions nor my words, but the fact of my existence, which makes them hate me so bitterly. I am sorry, but I suppose it cannot be helped."

New India and the Indian Press Act.

30. New India, of the 21st November, observes:—"As the whole atmosphere is again thick with rumours, and as the Government apparently take the Madras Mail as their mentor instead of putting it under security, as they should do, it is necessary to warn our subscribers that if the paper suddenly stops, it will be because the Government has confiscated the press. If this should happen, we ask our subscribers to wait patiently for a day or two, as they will hear from us. It still seems incredible to us, despite what we have heard, that the Government will not only retain our money, illegally forfeited, but will proceed to defy the High Court further by a second illegal forfeiture, and that while the first is to be raised in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We are hampered here by the extraordinary slowness of the High Court, from which we have so far failed to obtain the copies of the judgment necessary to ask permission to appeal. We understand that copies have been for some time in the hands of the Government Solicitor, but we are not so fortunate as to be favoured with any, despite our early application. NEW INDIA, Madras, Nov. 21st, 1916.

"Even should New India be, for the moment, stopped, it will only be a suspension, not a destruction. We have little doubt of our final success in England, and we shall then recover all that, for the moment, we may lose. We need not grieve for it, for it has done its work. The Indian press speaks with a new vigour; the Indian public makes its voice heard. However much the Government may ignore public opinion, it must at last bow to it. The Home Rule which was, a year ago, a cry in the wilderness, is now a household word. The proposals which were the 'dreams of an impatient idealist' are now put forward by our representatives in the Supreme Council, by the All-India Congress Committee and the Muslim League. New India may be crushed, but its work survives. Its editor may be interned, but others have stepped forward. Further harshness to her will hasten the triumph of the cause for which she suffers. The only sorrowful thing is that the triumph will have mingled with its elements which she has striven to keep out.
